Night Sittings Threatened To Speed Adjournment

Lending Bill Delayed By Other Measures, Barkley Moves Up Meetings to 11 A. M.

By Robert C. Albright

Faced with a heavy calendar and slow progress on the President's $2,490,000,000 lending bill, Congressional leaders last night abandoned plans for adjournment this Saturday and fixed next midweek as a tentative "sine die" date.

"It may be possible we will have to begin holding night sessions on Wednesday and continue them in an effort to finish necessary legislation," Senate Majority Leader Barkeley told the Senate following a conference with House leaders.

Barkley moved up the hour of meeting from noon to 11 a. m. and called for co-operation of Senators "not only in meeting earlier and staying later but in remaining on the floor to avoid quorum calls."

At a standstill in the House Banking Committee, the Administration's much-modified lending program was reported to the Senate but failed to get immediate consideration when lengthy debate intervened on a bill to create eight new judgeships and on the Panama Treaty.

A flood of new mollifying amendments meanwhile was prepared by opponents of the "works financing" measure and a "compromise" was being drawn to satisfy demands for specific prohibitions on use of Government funds to foster projects competing with private business.

Byrd, Taft Plan Attacks

Developments included:

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, offered a series of amendments designed completely to eliminate $500,000,000 for toll highways, abolish authority to purchase up to $350,000,000 in local bonds, limit the life of the program to one year and make all securities issued under the program subject to taxation.

Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, said he plans to challenge constitutionality of taking funds from the Treasury under the lending device without specific appropriations. Taft, in conjunction with an opposition coalition, said 18 amendments have been prepared further to curtail the program.

The Senate Banking Committee filed a report on the bill claiming 500,000 new jobs would be created by the program, business would be stimulated and Federal relief costs reduced. It said that, without increasing the public debt, national income will be increased, strengthening the revenue-yielding power of the present tax structure.

Morgenthau Opposes PWA

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau flatly opposed any additional appropriations for PWA loans and grants. Senator Maloney (Democrat), of Connecticut, is preparing a Senate amendment to add $350,000,000 to the lending bill to continue the PWA program on a 30 per cent Federal grant and 70 per cent loan basis.

In the House, Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama, has a similar PWA bill. The Morgenthau declaration followed conference with a House delegation led by Starnes.

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, included the additional PWA legislation in a list of measures he said should be enacted before Congress adjourned. A partial concession was made by the Senate Banking Committee when it applied "prevailing wage" standards to PWA sections of the lending bill.

Threatening to prolong Senate debate on the new loan program, amendments on two other highly controversial issues may be offered as riders on the lending bill.

Sponsors of prevailing wages on WPA relief projects said they will

$3,000 Gems, Car Taken by Thief

Jewelry valued at $3,000 and a 1938 sedan were stolen from the residence of Paul E. Lesh, Washington attorney, at 2820 Thirty-second street northwest, sometime between July 15 and July 21, District police reported yesterday. Lesh was in San Francisco attending the annual meeting of the American Bar Association when his home was entered.

According to police, a dining-room window had been jimmied and the contents of drawers strewn through several rooms. Old jewelry, silverware, a .32-caliber revolver and a valuable collection of early American coins were taken.

Conferees Deadlocked on Security Bill

Southern Senators Insist on Retaining Connally Amendment

The Administration's Social Security amendments yesterday were jammed in a serious conference deadlock as House conferees refused to accept the Senate's Connally amendment to liberalize Federal old age assistance to the States.

The Administration was reported to be backing the House group in its failure to yield to the Senate's demand for a $2 Federal grant for every $1 put up by the States toward the first $15 of needy old age pensions.

Some Southern Senators, who are contending the change is essential to payment of adequate pensions by low-income States, privately took the view that "the amendment will stand, or there will be no bill."

Swiftly discarded by both House and Senate conferees was another Senate amendment to require a minimum State payment toward old age assistance of $10 a month and assure a minimum needy pension of $25 in States that participated. This amendment, by Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, would have denied Federal old-age assistance to States failing to contribute at least $10.

Besides the Connally amendment, two other Senate changes were reported unacceptable to House conferees and were holding up a conference agreement on the bill.

These were:

The Senate provision to lower eligibility requirements for old

President Believes Future Talks Will Still Be 'Effective'

By the Associated Press

Hyde Park, N. Y., July 24.—A conference between President Roosevelt and National Democratic Chairman James A. Farley ended today in an atmosphere of secrecy, leaving unanswered ticklish political questions about a third term, the 1940 campaign and the personal relationship of the heads of the Democratic Party.

One significant but puzzling pronouncement came from the President— that he thought his talks with Farley would continue to be effective.

He said that at his home here, where Farley was a guest last night, the two of them had just had another of the regular conversations they had been having since 1928.

Not Much Story in That

They continued along the same lines as they had for 11 years, Mr. Roosevelt said, and there wasn't much story in that except that the results, on the whole, had been fairly effective, and he thought they would continue to be effective.

If there was a hint that Farley and "the Boss" might have taken up the third term issue, that statement contained it.

Reporters noted especially the remark about the talks continuing in the same tenor. In previous parleys through the last 11 years, Mr. Roosevelt and Farley have canvassed political conditions from every angle and mapped out their own political destinies.

But whether Farley asked about the President's 1940 intentions, or got an answer, was a question which only they could answer. They remained silent.

Farley Stands at Elbow

Behind the wheel of his blue touring car, parked under a big oak tree in a hay field on his estate, the President talked with reporters about the conference. Farley stood at his elbow.

Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt had just signed a deed giving the field to the Government as the site for a library for the President's historic documents and papers.

As to what passed between the Chief Executive and the man who has been his chief political ally, Mr. Roosevelt said that if he were writing the story, he would have to make it uninteresting and devoid of speculation, and he would have to stick to the truth. The truth, he said, was that the conference was merely one of the regular talks that

Battlefield Crater Just a Divot In Petersburg's Directory

Shades of Billy Mabone, the hero of Petersburg, Virginia's Battle of the Crater! History might have written a different account if he had worked with a putter at the ninth hole. Then the whole thing becomes confused and the Petersburg Chamber of Commerce shuts it off with "It wasn't our fault."

But the reality is there. A picture in the Petersburg City Directory, the new one, is captioned to indicate that it shows the glamorous Crater, where part of a regiment of South Carolinians, suh, was blown into the air when the Yankees set off a ton of dynamite under the Confederate line.

But the picture is of a golf course at Virginia Beach. The chamber was astounded. F. K. Martin, the chamber's secretary, went into an immediate huddle with his history and what he knew of pictures the chamber supplied the directory company.

Everyone in Petersburg knows The Crater, he considered. Thousands of tourists have visited Petersburg to muse over the once-big hole in the ground—that Yankee enterprise that boomeranged. He knew the Crater by picture or by sight. But this picture in the Directory was of a golf course. Maybe a battlefield, but not the House Blocks Curb-Service Beer in D. C.

Threat of Filibuster Spells Bill's Doom; Lunacy Measure Is Among 11 Passed

By James D. Secrest.

The final District day of the session in the House turned into a near fiasco yesterday as members of the District Committee threatened a filibuster to block a bill that would legalize the drinking of beer in automobiles.

Chairman Randolph, who was allowed a brief period by House leaders with the understanding that controversial legislation would not be called up, was forced to withdraw the measure after Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, raised a no quorum point of order.

Follows Dickinson's Crusade

Shafer's fight against the "curb service" beer bill came on the heels of the crusade of Gov. Dickinson, of Michigan, against drinking and gay life in New York City. He won hearty support, however, from Representatives Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, and McCormack (Democrat), of Pennsylvania.

The Michigan Representative's argument was directed at the traffic hazards of mixing intoxicants and auto driving rather than at moral issues.

The only other opposition encountered in the consideration of 13 local bills likewise came from another member of the District Committee, Representative Eberharter (Democrat), of Pennsylvania. He blocked a measure amending the motorists' financial responsibility act to include reckless driving among the offenses for which a driving permit may be suspended.

D'Alesandro Appointed

Later in the day the appointment of Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland, to membership on the House District Committee was announced by the Ways and Means Committee. D'Alesandro, who hails from Baltimore, succeeds Representative Byron (Democrat), of Maryland, who was transferred to the Military Affairs Committee.

Eleven bills, including the amended Vreeland measure to expedite the handling of lunacy cases, were passed in the House by unanimous consent in rapid-fire order.

Senate to Act Promptly

Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee, said he will call a meeting of the committee early this week to clear the Senate docket of all local bills that have passed the House or have a good possibility of being enacted into law before Congress adjourns.

The House District Committee went into a huddle on the House floor when Shafer raised a point of order to block the beer bill as members argued with him to withdraw it. He finally agreed after being allowed time to speak. The bill subsequently was voted down with a loud chorus of "noes."

Designed to circumvent a ruling of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, the bill, sponsored by Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, would restore the right

D.C. Recreation Changes to Go In Effect Aug. 1

4-Director System Approved 'in Principle' By Sub-Committee

Plans for reorganization of District playground and community center activities, under direction of four assistant recreation directors, will go into effect by August 1, Engineer Commissioner David McCoach announced yesterday.

Col. McCoach, spokesman for a sub-committee of the new District Recreation Board, said he and his colleagues also are giving careful study to immediate opening of more school playgrounds.

Grounds Get New Aides

Meanwhile, additional supervisors were sent yesterday to eight play centers and school grounds which have been open all through the summer, to organize programs for young children.

According to the office of Lewis Barrett, recreation administrator, playgrounds which received extra personnel are Gallinger, Bancroft, Henry Polk, Hamilton, Chevy Chase, Ben Murch, McMillan and Sherwood.

Candidates Not Yet Considered

Preliminary blueprints for the new recreation setup yesterday were placed before the sub-committee by Barrett. The program was approved "in principle," Col. McCoach revealed after a three-hour conference with Barrett and C. Melvin Sharpe, other sub-committee members, but several details must undergo revision.

Barrett will report to the sub-committee again tomorrow, Mc-

U. S. Challenged On S. Polar Claims By Argentina

Buenos Aires, July 24 (AP).—Argentina today prepared to oppose the United States by advancing rival claims to a portion of the Antarctic.

The government accepted an invitation to the Congress of Arctic Explorers at Bergen, Norway, which meets from May to September, 1940, where her views on the Antarctic will be presented.

At the same time the Argentine press, with what appeared to be inspired unanimity, challenged sharply, the United States' action in preparing to "extend the Monroe Doctrine" to the South Pole by sending an expedition to the region.

Demonstrating the opposition that Argentina has displayed against the United States on practically every major political issue involving the Western Hemisphere recently, the government ordered creation of a commission to draft within 90 days a full plan of Argentina's claim.

Westchester Fire Hurts Fighter, Routs 30 Residents

A fireman was injured and thirty residents of Westchester Apartments, Thirty-ninth street and Cathedral avenue northwest, were routed from their quarters late last night when a two-alarm blaze swept a seventh-floor apartment of Building B.

The fire was confined largely to three rooms of the apartment, occupied by the family of Alvin L. Newmyer, District attorney.

Fireman George C. Bowie, of No. 12 Truck, was overcome by smoke and suffered scalded feet. He had to be rescued by gas-masked firemen. Virgil Potts, night manager, also required first aid.

More than 1,500 spectators watched the thick-smoked blaze.

Fire in Senate Wing

Shortly before midnight a second blaze broke out in Senate wing of the Capitol. A can of grease burning in the kitchen basement sent smoke pouring through the ventilating system, and attracted a large crowd.

Hull Voices 'Concern' At Japanese Assaults; British Bow to Tokyo

Chamberlain Agrees To Avoid Nippon's Path in China; Denies New Appeasement

By the Associated Press

London, July 24.—Britain promised today to stay out of the way of the Japanese army in China and disavowed any plans to "buy peace" by an "appeasement loan" to Germany.

Prime Minister Chamberlain made the two statements in the House of Commons amid openly voiced fears of opposition members that he was swinging again to the appeasement policy he pursued until the German army marched into Prague March 15.

As an outgrowth of the bitter anti-British campaign in Japan and Japanese-occupied sections of China, the prime minister announced terms of a preliminary agreement under which Britain recognized that "Japanese forces in China have special requirements for the purpose of safeguarding their own security and maintaining public order in the regions under their control."

De Facto Recognition Denied

"They have to suppress or remove any acts or causes as will obstruct them or benefit their enemy."

Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax in the House of Lords declared the Japanese had agreed to try to control anti-British demonstrations and that nothing in the negotiations in Tokyo would "affect the position and obligations of other powers."

The agreement, announced simultaneously by Britain and Japan, was reached in Tokyo talks between British Ambassador Craigie and Foreign Minister Arita as a preliminary to a broader British-Japanese conference on their dispute in Tientsin which has been intensified by the Japanese blockade since July 14 of the British and French concessions.

(Hailing the agreement as a "sweeping diplomatic victory," Japanese insisted it granted them virtual belligerent rights in their undeclared war against China.)

Chamberlain denied, however, that the agreement involved any change of British policy toward the Chinese-Japanese war or that his government "has now definitely taken the side of Japan."

No Intent of "Bribery"

Replying to a barrage of opposition questions, he denied the agreement constituted de facto recognition of Japanese sovereignty in Japanese-controlled areas of China and gave assurances that in the Tokyo negotiations on Tientsin local issues, nothing would be agreed upon which would impair Chinese currency or Britain's right to grant credits to China.

Confronted with a political furore over one of his junior ministers, R. S. Hudson, secretary for overseas trade, the prime minister told Parliament that the "private conversation" between German and British trade officials last week about a broad European settlement scheme was without the cabinet's knowledge or sanction.

He publicly exonerated Hudson of any impropriety in discussing with Dr. Helmuth Wohlthat, German trade expert, the possibilities of enabling Germany to return to a policy of negotiation and disarmament through a big British loan to the Reich and a colonial settlement.

Arthur Greenwood, deputy leader of the Labor Party, asked bluntly, "Can we take it that there is no intention on the part of the government now to begin discussions which might look like bribery to Herr Hitler in order to buy peace?"

"It is not the intention of the government to initiate any discussions of this kind," Chamberlain replied.

Silver Leaves U. S. as London Price Rises

Normal Flow of Metal Reversed for First Time in Years

Silver, which as a monetary metal ranks as gold's lowbrow companion, recently has been moving to Europe from America for the first time in years.

The London silver market, source of most of the Treasury's enormous foreign silver purchases under the 1934 silver purchase act, recently has been buying the metal from the United States.

The explanation, according to Government experts, lies in an abnormal price situation caused by the drastic break in world silver prices precipitated when a Senate filibuster against the Administration monetary bill caused monetary powers to lapse temporarily June 30.

Treasury Cuts Price

As the silver price in London fell, the Treasury cut its price for foreign silver from 43 to 35 cents per ounce.

Recently, however, experts explained, the London price has ranged between 43-100 and 56-100 of a cent higher than the Treasury price.

As a result, New York banks, struggling to squeeze a penny of profit here and there from their unprecedented volume of idle funds, have been taking advantage of the higher London price by shipping silver to London.

About 1,500,000 ounces have been shipped, Treasury sources said. The

Newport 'Heaven' Threatened With Bombing

Newport, R. I., July 24 (AP).—A warning that the Newport mansion of Mrs. Angela Kaufman, recently offered to Harlem's Father Devine as a "heaven" for his "angels," would be bombed unless the colored evangelist keeps out of Newport was contained tonight in a crudely written message found at the residence

Mrs. Kaufman was not at home, having left Newport earlier, to meet Father Divine at an undisclosed rendezvous.

'Fortress' Rises 23,800 Feet With Record 11,023-Lb. Load

In a series of secret tests, the regular combat crew of an Army "flying fortress" has established three national altitude records, it was announced last night by the War Department.

Commanded by Lieut. Col. Robert Olds, leader of the flying fortress good-will flight to Buenos Aires last year, the four-man Air Corps crew smashed records carrying loads of 1,000, 2,000 and 5,000 kilograms.

The bomber reached an altitude of 23,800 feet with the 5,000-kilogram load—11,023 pounds—the first time an American plane has sought an altitude record so heavily loaded.

It also was reported, without confirmation, that one of the giant bombers had attempted to break the international speed record over a 1,000 kilometer course, but that the War Department had decided to keep the results secret since a technical defect had been found in the timing devices.

Further speed tests, it was said, would probably be attempted this week. All the tests have been made at Langley Field, Va.

The international record for a 5,000 kilogram load, according to figures of the National Aeronautic Association, was established in 1938 at Dessau, Germany, by Karl Heinz Kindermann and Rupprecht Wendell, who rose to 30,551 feet in a Junkers plane.

Series of Attacks on Americans Censured; U. S. Policy in Orient Held Unchanged

By William V. Nessly.

Official expression of concern over continuing assaults on Americans by Japanese in China came yesterday in the midst of a Senatorial move to abrogate this country's 1911 treaty of commerce and navigation with Japan.

Secretary of State Hull, telling reporters that suitable amends had been made by Japanese officials for two such assaults on Americans, declared that naturally this Government observes with concern the increasing number of such incidents.

Policy Unchanged

At the same time, he gave plain indication that Great Britain's agreement with Japan announced yesterday would have no effect on this country's policy in China. He cited a formal statement issued by him on June 19, which said this country was not concerned in the original British-Japanese dispute that led to the Japanese blockade of the British concession at Tientsin, but added:

"It is concerned, however, with the nature and significance of subsequent developments, in their broader aspects, coupled with other past and present acts and utterances in other parts of China."

There has been no change in the United States' attitude, the Secretary said yesterday.

His comment on the new "incidents" was made in response to a question whether "suitable amends" for an isolated individual incident would be considered suitable in view of the long series of such attacks that have occurred ever since the attack on and sinking of the United States gunboat Panay.

Unable to Speak Fully

Observing that he was unable to speak fully in that connection at present, the Secretary added his expression of concern over continuation of the attacks despite repeated protests.

Meanwhile, there was varied Capitol Hill reaction to Great Britain's agreement with Japan, involving British recognition of special Japanese requirements in China.

Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, declared that if the United States had followed Britain's policy in the Far East "we would have been left holding the bag again."

Senator Borah, Idaho Republican, however, was inclined to welcome the agreement, asserting that this country's only interest should be in the preservation of peaceful relations among nations.

List of Aggravations

Peaceful settlement of the beating of R. A. Baker, warrant officer aboard the United States gunboat Guam by a Japanese sentry at Hankow was reported by Japanese naval authorities, after the Navy Department here announced a strong protest had been presented. The beating was said to have resulted from the sentry's effort to force Baker to walk on the left side of the street. Action of a group of Japanese soldiers who intervened and arrested Baker was especially protested.

Assaults to which Secretary Hull referred included the slapping by a Japanese sentry of Hannah Stocks, Hartford, Conn., and Winston Haskell, 13-year-old son of Missionary W. W. Haskell, at Wuhu. United States Consul General Clarence E. Gauss reported that the sentry and his commanding officer had been disciplined and steps had been taken to prevent a repetition.

In addition, two American missionaries, Charles W. Worth, Wilmington, N. C., and Kepler Van Evera, of Davenport, Iowa, reported they had been victims of an unprovoked assault at Hangchow by a Japanese consular police officer.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

So sleepy was the Senate the other afternoon that it missed one of Senator Borah's rare precious little jokes. Someone had just asserted that this country is now importing 15 times as much rags from England as formerly, to go into American woolens.

Sen. Bridges

"In these importations from Great Britain under the designation of rags," asked Senator Borah, "what is included?"

Experts on Borah humor thought he was referring obliquely to the neutrality bill and our foreign policy.

If you're hard up for light summer reading, you might try the reports of the La Follette Committee on violations of free speech and the rights of labor. These printed reports have now reached the colossal total of 17,078 pages, in 45 separate volumes, and in spots are as exciting (1) as a detective thriller, (2) a bank statement.

"—a prank in the House"

That reminds me that the 1939 speeches of Senators and Representatives, as printed in the Congressional Record, now total over 14,000 pages for the session.

But these are larger pages than the La Follette reports, and the type is smaller.

The 14,000 pages would equal about 55,000 pages of the average novel, or about 150 average books. And since the average American reads about one book a year, he would presumably require 150 years to read what Congress said this year.

In a prankish mood, a Congressman pinned a "Vote for Roosevelt" sign on the back of Congressman Ham Fish, the President's Republican neighbor and severest critic.

Peals of summer laughter warned Mr. Fish as he walked across the floor, and he exited clawing at the placard advertising his most famous constituent in the Twenty-sixth New York District.

Senatorial debate hit a new low for the season in an exchange of compliments between Senators Bridges (N. H.) and Schwellenbach (Wash.) . . . The Westerner kidded the Easterner about his Presidential aspirations, his mysterious "farm plan," and the "sounds" which have emanated from him.

* * * *

Bridges, whose mimeographs are galloping hard toward the 1940 nomination, replied in much the same lingo, joshing Schwellenbach about never earning a day's living on the farm.

"I have worked on a farm," retorted the Westerner, "having performed all the menial tasks necessary to be done on a farm. The Senator is simply as accurate in discussing my life as he is in anything else he discusses."

Something was said about the soundness of the New Deal.

"Certainly there is no lack of sound," niftied Schwellenbach, "coming out of the Senator from New Hampshire."

"And we have heard some sound coming from the Senator from Washington," retorted Bridges brilliantly.

Such repartee violates a Senate rule against insulting colleagues in the Senate. But the galleries enjoyed it as light summer listening.

He said he didn't know what reporters could make of his statement about the effectiveness of those talks, and that he did not believe they could obtain additional information either from himself or the Postmaster General.

"Nobody is going to catch up with me," Farley interposed.

The Democratic chairman sails for Europe later in the week.

Originally he had been scheduled to talk with the press, but Mr. Roosevelt took the conference over.

The only word "Big Jim" had for the correspondents was that he had had an "interesting" chat with his chief and that any statement about it must come from the President.

His manner was serious while Mr. Roosevelt was speaking and he listened intently. Remarks were overheard, among some of those present to watch the deed signing, that Farley looked none too happy.

Yet he and the President had joshed about the European trip and their faces broke into broad grins when Farley extended a hand and said:

"Good-by, boss. I'll keep in touch with you."

Hostile Rules Committee Blocks Housing

Urban Members Plan Fight to Force Bill To Floor of House

The Administration's bill extending the scope of the United States Housing authority was shunted aside yesterday, as a hostile Rules Committee deferred a vote and thereby blocked the measure from the floor of the House.

However, friends of the bill hoped that heavy Administration pressure on hesitant Democratic members of the committee might lead to favorable committee action within a few days.

Presure from the House membership, also, was felt yesterday as a petition was circulated calling for a Democratic caucus to whip up enthusiasm for pasage of the housing bill and other Administration measures before adjournment.

Caucus Petition Circulated

The caucus call, which requires only 25 signatures to be effective, received impetus from urban Democrats who are particularly anxious that the housing measure be pased. The bill would double UHA's loan authorization to $1,600,000,000, and raise the annual Federal subSsidy to $73,000,000. Provision is included for $200,000,000 of rural housing loans.

The Rules Committee's action in failing to vote on the housing proposal after two days of hearings was interpreted yesterday as an indication of the desperate efforts of Chairman Sabath, a 100 per cent New Dealer, to prevent permanent defeat of the bill. A delay, it was thought, might give time to persuade some members to agree to let the bill reach the House floor, even though they were opposed to its ultimate passage.

On the other hand, some observers thought that the committee's failure to vote yesterday meant that the bill was "on ice" for the remainder of the session. The measure has passed the Senate.

Pleads With Committee

Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, influential member of the Ways and Means Committee, pleaded with the Rules Committee to bring out the housing bill. Warning his colleagues — especially the Democrats—against setting themselves up as a "veto committee," McCormack said that the function of the Rules Committee was to expedite House business.

The ranking minority member of the Banking and Currency Committee, Representative Wolcott, of Michigan, told the Rules group that "it might be better to stay here all summer than to spend the $4,380,000,000" which he estimated the measure would involve

Wolcott's Figures Challenged

Meanwhile, James Urich, executive secretary of the American Federation of Housing Authorities, challenged Wolcott's figures. The present capital value of the Government's annual contribution of $73,000,000 for 60 years is not $4,380,000,000, he said, but only $1,526,000,000.

He added that it made "no more sense" to add up the annual subsidies for slum-clearance and low-rent housing than to add up the Government's annual grants for roads, schools or defense."

William Green, president of the A. F. L., asked yesterday that Congress give "serious consideration" to the housing bill before adjournment.

Night Sessions Hinted in Senate inject the dispute into the lending bill fight if they fail to gain separate legislative provisions.

Senator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, reasserted his intention of asking the Senate to write into the loan measure a specific ban on Treasury purchase of foreign silver, a project that gained Senate approval as a money bill rider only to be later abandoned in conference.

Introducing the silver amendment, Townsend said yesterday he saw no reason to believe banning foreign purchases would interfere with U. S. "good neighbor" policy since the money bill's guarantee to pay 71 cents an ounce for domestic silver effectively removed metal produced in this country from the world market. That, he argued, should benefit Mexico.

Competition Ban Weighed

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming may draw an amendment to prevent possible Government competition with private enterprise. Such an amendment originally was approved by the banking committee, but later was withdrawn. Leaders said it was "to broad" and a compromise would be framed.

"It is my opinion that the central objective of this bill, like that of all other relief bills, is to promote private business," said O'Mahoney. "It seems to me to follow as a logical conclusion that if there are any uncertainties in this measure which would lead to unnecessary conflict between Government and private business, they ought to be removed."

Barkley's night session threat was voiced as unexpectedly lengthy debate on the Ashurst judgeship bill and the Panama treaty blocked plans to move forward the lending measure. Barkley said Congressional committees have practically finished their work and there is no reason Congress cannot adjourn the middle of next week if it meets early and sits late. But Barkley's appeal for Senators to remain on the floor was forgotten a few hours later when the Senate was forced to delay a Panama treaty vote for want of a quorum.

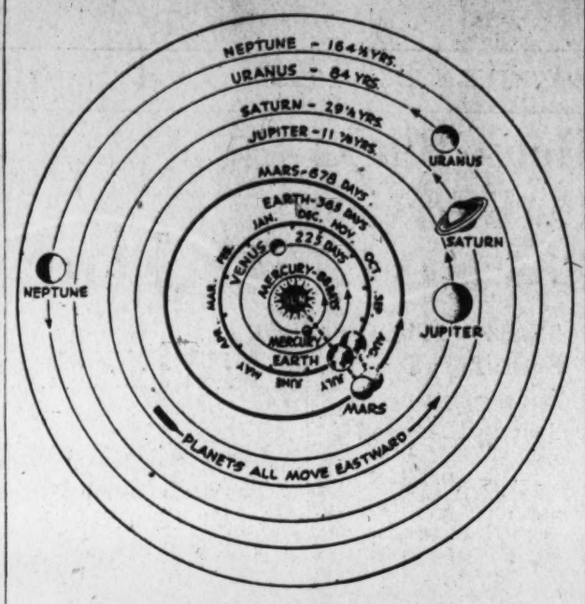
Here's Why Mars Is Closest To Earth—It's a Matter of Time



Two Planets, Due to Difference in Speed, Will Be Nearest to Each Other On Thursday, Only 36,033,000 Miles

By Howard W. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Editor

If you stood on the nearest fixed star and looked down, this is the view you would get of the earth, Mars and all the other planets, except Pluto, who is too far out from the sun to fit this drawing.

The map shows why Mars is now closest to the earth, 36,033,000 miles, in 15 years. The other planets have nothing to do with the reunion, but the drawing shows the correct position of each of them today.

The circles (they are really ellipses) show the fixed orbits of earth, Mars and other planets. Notice that the channel of space between the orbits of Mars and earth is much narrower on one side of the sun than elsewhere. Mars and earth are coming close today for the same reason that two persons walking on opposite banks of a broad river would come closer to each other where the river narrowed.

Mars and earth do not travel at the same speed. The earth does 19½ miles a second, Mars 15 miles. The doubled figures of earth and Mars in the drawing show this speed difference. The earth today is already pulling out ahead of Mars, as shown in the picture.

Because of the difference in the time each planet takes to circle the sun, earth and Mars simultaneously reach the "narrows" in their "space river" only six or seven times in a century.

Earth and Mars were exactly opposite each other, or at "opposition" July 23. But because the narrowest part of the space separating their orbits is ahead of the July 23 position, they actually are closest together on July 27, despite the fact, as the picture shows, that the earth has moved past Mars and has to look slightly toward the rear to see him.

Scientists To Map Polar Program Here

Type of Research on Antarctic Survey Will Be Determined

Scientists from all over the country will gather at the National Academy of Sciences Building on Friday morning to determine exactly what particular phases of research are to be conducted by the staff of the United States Antarctic expedition, of which Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd is commanding officer.

Dr. Isaiah Bowman, president of Johns Hopkins University, will be chairman of the distinguished gathering, which will open its sessions at 10:30 a. m.

Dr. Wade to Give Agenda

Dr. Frank A. Wade, recently appointed senior scientist of the expedition, will present the agenda. A professor of geology at Miami University, Wade accompanied the Byrd group in 1933-35.

Acting on the suggestion of the executive committee of the United States Antarctic Service, the conference was called by the National Research Council, serving as an agent for the National Academy of Sciences.

At the meetings, which may last a week or more, one delegate for each scientific group taking part in the conference will be elected to a scientific advisory board. This board, it is expected, will serve throughout the expedition in conjunction with the service's executive group, which is composed of Ernest Gruening, director of the division of territories and island possessions; Hugh Cumming, of the State Department; Capt. Charles C. Hargigan, U. S. N., and Rear Admiral Russell R. Waesche, Coast Guard commandant.

Also present at the sessions will be Admiral Byrd, who will come from Boston to Washington on Friday.

The Interior Department's field representative on the expedition will be Richard B. Black, of the division of territories and island possessions. Like Wade, a member of the 1933-35 Antarctic survey, he represented the United States in 1938 in the colonization of the islands of Canton and Enderbury in the South Seas.

President Asks Funds to Complete World Airline

By International News Service.

Establishment of the last link in round-the-world air mail service was proposed yesterday by President Roosevelt in submitting a budget estimate to Congress calling for $900,000 to pay the cost of establising a foreign airmail route from San Francisco to Australasia via Honolulu.

With establishment of this route, anticipated for next month, United States lines would connect with Imperial Airways lines of Great Britain at New Zealand. Pan American Airways, which has been flying the Pacific with mail and passengers for several years, is expected to extend its service on the New Zealand line, as a result of surveys already made.

American and English planes thus would circle the world—British from London to New Zealand, American from New Zealand over the Pacific, across the United States and across the Atlantic to London.

Senate Group To Study WPA Changes Today

Murray Sponsors Bill To Abolish Limit of 18 Months on Relief

Amidst an avalanche of demandes for liberalization of the 1940 relief act, a Senate appropriations subcommittee will meet today to consider possible amendment of the law.

Senator Murray (Democrat), of Montana, yesterday introduced a bill abolishing the present rule restricting WPA workers to not more than 18 consecutive months on the relief rolls. This provision of the law, which is scheduled to take effect September 1, has aroused protests comparable to those directed against abolition of the prevailing wage.

Keller Asks More Funds

Murray has already offered a bill restoring the prevailing hourly wage rate and providing that the monthly security wage remain the same as on June 30. Under present law the security wage will be made more uniform throughout the country by slashes in the North and increases in the South.

In the House, Reresentative Keller (Democrat), of Illinois, said he would introduce a bill today providing for an additional WPA appropriation of $1,200,000,000, to employ a total of 3,000,000 persons on the relief roles.

Meanwhile, William Green, president of the A. F. of L., and Ralph Hetzel, jr., unemployment director of the C. I. O., demanded, in separate statements, that Congress restore the prevailing wage on work relief. Haetzel also asked that cuts in the security wage be presented, while Green requested restoration of the WPA theater project.

Woodrum Assailed

The Workers' Security Federation, an organization of relief workers, asked for "at least $1,000,000,000 of additional funds" for WPA, while predicting that "millions of the unemployed will never again find employment in private industry."

Representative Marcantonio (American Labor), of New York, and president of the International Labor Defense, yesterday denounced the alleged action of Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, acting chairman of the WPA investigating committee, in asking for the names of all New Yorkk WPA workers who quit for one day to take part in a protest meeting "for the purpose of petitioning Congress."

Senate Committee Backs Probe of Immigration

The Senate Immigration Committee yesterday reported favorably legislation sponsored by Senator Holman (Republican), of Oregon, calling for an investigation of immigration into the United States.

Another bill providing for deportation of all aliens found guilty of espionage against the interests of national defense was also favorably reported.

The Holman resolution would grant a sub-committee of the immigration committee $50,000 for the probe to determine to what extent aliens have entered this country in violation of the immigration laws.

La Follette, Thomas Offer Labor Spy Bill

Ban on Guns and Gas To Break Strikes Held Forty Years Overdue

By International News Service.

Far-reaching legislation to prohibit employers from using labor spies, strikebreakers and industrial munitions, such as machine guns, sawed-off shotguns and chemical bombs, was urged upon the Senate yesterday by Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, on behalf of the Education and Labor Committee.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, committee chairman, joined La Follette in sponsoring a bill designed to prohibit "oppressive labor practices." It was the fruit of two and a half years of investigation by a special Senate committee headed by La Follette.

"This bill is several decades overdue," said the report. "Over the past 40 years, Governmental investigations have insistently brought to the attention of the Congress the needless bloodshed and strife which has attended the use of the machine gun, the labor spy, the professional strikebreaker and the criminal strike guard as instruments of labor policy.

"Recent Federal legislation protecting the rights of labor to organize for the purpose of collective bargaining, in challenging these deep-rooted evils, has caused them to spring up in a more aggravated form.

"It is time now, after a comprehensive investigation has been made, to take steps which will free industry and the public from these dangerous practices."

Private spy systems and private police forces have denied workmen their right to free speech and assembly, the report said. The bill will contribute to industrial peace and dangerous weapons no longer will be "available for the itchy fingers of any man who might get excited" during a strike, the report continued.

Attorney General Murphy has indicated the measure is constitutional and the Department of Labor has urged its passage as necessary to foster economic and industrial peace, the report went on.

Wiley Regrets Failure to Repeal Neutrality Act

By the Associated Press

Asserting that the present neutrality law left American ships laden with American goods free to roam the seas in wartime and "be torpedoed," Senator Wiley (Republican), Wisconsin, expressed regret yesterday that the Senate had not voted to repeal all existing statutes relating to neutrality.

He told the Senate the Administration's "tactics of delay" had been responsible largely for the chamber's failure to act this session on the neutrality issue.

Hastening to add that he did not favor the Administration's proposals for revision of the neutrality act, Wiley said:

"I am in favor of a return to the basic principles of international law. I want to give the President less authority, not more."

This huge bit of postal was delivered yesterday in the office of the Clerk of the House. On Capitol Hill

By the Associated Press

A proposal by Chairman Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, of the Senate Commerce Committee to trim the omnibus authorization bill for rivers and harbors to $82,961,650 ran into opposition yesterday from friends of the big projects which his plan would eliminate.

SEN. BAILEY

The substitute bill would strike out authorizations for all flood control items and all rivers and harbors work which would cost $10,500,000 or more.

Senator Hill (Democrat), of Alabama, advocating the $66,000,000 Tennessee-Tombigbee inland waterway, predicted rejection of the Bailey bill. One Senator counted seven members of the committee who were backing big projects which would be eliminated under the substitute.

As previously reported, the bill would authorize projects totaling $407,000,000. Bailey warned committeemen a bill of this size had no chance of enactment at this session.

Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, told the House "it would be wise if Secretary Morgenthau would use a little red ink in publishing the daily Treasury statement."

"It's published in black ink," he shouted, "and that only fools the American people."

Legislators found evidence in the Congressional Record yesterday that Senator Ashurst, of Arizona, is about to embark on another election campaign.

Under the heading "speeches by and editorial comment concerning Senator Ashurst," the Arizonan filled nearly 20 pages of the record—39½ pages to be exact—with an account of his accomplishments and what the folks back home and elsewhere have had to say about them.

One editorial describes Ashurst as the "most melodious and courtly of Senators." In another he is hailed as "gifted with an eloquence and dramatic power unique among political orators these prosaic days."

"This doesn't mean," the Senator told newsmen, "that I'm starting to run for another term. It means merely that I'm continuing to run."

Supported by both Nevada Senators, the nomination of Miles N. Pile, of Reno, to be U. S. district attorney for Nevada today was unanimously ordered reported favorably to the Senate by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Pike was nominated after the Senate, at the request of Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, blocked the nomination of William S. Boyle, of Reno.

The radio galleries of Congress were opened formally last night. On a program broadcast from the chamber of the House, Speaker Bankhead declared that radio is an "additional medium" for keeping the public informed but "there is no question of radio replacing the newspapers."

President Roosevelt, in a message to Fulton Lewis, jr., president of the Radio Correspondents' Association, said that "in broadcasting news of actual debate in the Congress ultimate public opinion will be based on the impartiality and fairness of the reporting. This includes giving 'equal prominence' to both sides of any issue, emphasizing all the implications of the words."

The Senate completed Congressional action on legislation extending to February 1, 1943, the time in which certain interlocking bank directorates may continue.

Parsons Fights Easing Hatch Bill Near D. C.

Accuses New Mexico Senator of Playing State Politics

Proposed exemption of Federal employes who reside in suburban Maryland and Virginia from certain provisions of the Hatch bill brought forth a cry of protest yesterday from Representative Parsons (Democrat), of Illinois, who fought for the legislation in the House.

At the same time, Representative Buck (Democrat), of California, called upon President Roosevelt to veto the measure because it "deprived thousands of persons of inherent rights."

Declaring that the "real purpose" of the Hatch bill was to prevent Federal employes in New Mexico from engaging in political activity, Parsons said in a formal statement:

"Now we have the paradoxical situation of Senator Hatch desiring to prevent Federal employes in all of the 48 States from engaging in political activity, but desiring to permit those both inside and outside the civil service, working in the District of Columbia, but residing outside the District, to engage in political activity.

"Where, oh where, is the consistency in the author of the bill? Why should Federal employes in Washington be permitted to engage in political activity while those civil service employes working in the States of Virginia and Maryland be prohibited? Consistency, thou art a jewel!

[The Hatch bill bars political activity to all Federal employes except those high officials in policy-making positions. Under his proposed amendment, Senator Hatch would give Federal employes living in suburban Maryland and Virginia communities the privilege of participating in local elections, a privilege granted them under the civil service rules. There is no exemption for Federal workers living in the District.—Editor's note.]

Darden Urges Probe of Navy Medical Boards

'White-Washing' of High Officers' Physical Defects Is Suspected

Representative Darden (Democrat), of Virginia, said yesterday he would demand an investigation of the Navy Medical Department to determine if medical boards are "whitewashing" physical defects of ranking officers of the Navy and Marine Corps.

The Virginian made this statement after evidence was presented to the House Naval Committee in executive session yesterday indicating that Brig. Gen. James J. Meade, U. S. M. C., was kept in active service for several years although Navy doctors knew him to be physically unfit.

"We were astonished at the testimony presented," Darden declared. "Chairman Vinson said he was informed that Meade's blood pressure was extremely high, yet he was kept in service and several times permitted to go to the hospital for a month before taking his regular physical examinations.

Griffith Backs Darden

"Gen. Meade was a line officer, commanding troops in the field, in a service supposed to be ready for instant action, yet, according to the evidence before us, he had to rest up for a month before he could pass the medical examination. I want to see if these facts are true, and if so, if this is a general practice as to ranking officers of the service."

Another member of the Naval Committee, Representative Griffith (Democrat), of Louisiana, joined Darden in his protest. Griffith, who was a practicing physician until he came to Congress three years ago, said the committee had been told that Gen. Meade's blood pressure was 226, and added that "no man of his age is fit for duty with that pressure."

"Thy are very strict with the rank and file," he declared, "but apparently they waive such things for the big fellows."

Agreed on Compromise

Gen. Meade was retired, June 20, not for physical disability, but by action of a board of line officers, members said. The committee's attention was directed to the case by an amendment added to a naval personnel bill in the Senate, which would restore him to the active list. The group opposed the amendment, but agreed to compromise with the Senate and allow Gen. Meade the retired pay of a major general.

Johnson Blocks Ratification of Panama Treaty

Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, yesterday opposed ratification of a proposed new treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama, charging that it would give the latter country "power to interfere with the defense of the Panama Canal."

The Californian led an attack on the treaty negotiated three years ago to supercede the 1903 pact governing regulation of the Panama Canal. Opposition centered on a proviso that American authorities consult Panama officials on defense of the canal.

While Administration forces contended that the Panama government accepted this to mean that American military forces could move into the Republic of Panama in an emergency and consult with them afterwards, the bloc headed by Johnson would not accept this as binding. Lack of a quorum in the Senate at 7 p. m. last night caused adjournment without action on the treaty. Its backers will attempt to bring it up again later in the week.

"We know it; what's all the commotion about?" he asked.

Father of 3 Confesses He Garroted Girl

Golf Course Worker Denies Assaulting Indiana Child

By the Associated Press

Attica, Ind., July 24.—Thomas Boyce, 26-year-old golf course employe, father of three small boys, admitted today in an oral confession, State police and county authorities said, that he garroted 11-year-old Elizabeth DeBruicker, Attica schoolgirl, and, after holding her face down in a small pond to make sure she was dead, buried her body near the Harrison Hills Country Club.

Sheriff William H. Ramsey said Boyce admitted strangling the pretty 4-H Club member Friday afternoon, but said the man denied criminally assaulting her.

The girl's body, buried in a shallow grave near the golf course where Boyce worked, was found Saturday afternoon, and Boyce was arrested a few hours later. She had been missing after attending a meeting of her 4-H Club Friday.

State Policeman Paul Rule recounted this story of the crime:

"He (Boyce) told us that he saw the little girl walking across the sixth green at the golf course Friday afternoon, and that he called to her to walk to the other side of the course with him.

"They sat down on a hillside and he said he became familiar with her and then he became panicky and made a garrote from her belt and strangled her. After that, he related, he carried her body to a small pond and held her face under the water until he was satisfied she had drowned. He said he buried her in the place where her body was found."

Boyce probably will be kept at Indianapolis until after the grand jury meets in September. A murder charge will be filed against him.

Son and Wife Held in Slaying Of Stepmother

Obliterated Prints Add to Mystery Of Bedroom Killing

By the Associated Press

Benton, Ill., July 24.—Sheriff Edward Powell tonight ordered George Gore, jr., 32, and his wife, Kathryn, 26, held in jail during investigation of the mysterious bedroom slaying of Gore's stepmother, Mrs. George W. Gore, sr., here early Sunday.

No charges were filed and the Gores denied any knowledge of the killing. They added they had not been in Benton recently.

An inquest scheduled for tonight was postponed until next Monday at the request of State's Attorney Rea Jones, who said he wished to investigate "certain angles" of the case.

Young Gore, brought here from his Capt Girardeau (Mo.) home, had declined to testify at the inquest.

A neighbor had reported seeing a man run from the Gore home after the shots that killed the 45-year-old second wife of Dr. George W. Gore, sr., 65, prominent physician.

But when police sought to make casts of the prints, described as those of a running man, they found them obliterated.

Denver, July 24 (AP).—Harry Gips, 62-year-old tubercular patient at the National Jewish Hospital, shot and wounded two nurses at the institution today, then killed himself.

One of the nurses, Helen Botts, 30, suffered a bullet wound through the head and little hope was held for her recovery.

The other, Jane Lowry, 45, was wounded in the left arm.

Gips, a Spanish-American War veteran, came from a veterans' hospital in North Carolina several months ago.

Coroner Gus Economy said a rambling note was found in Gips' room. He said it announced his intention of shooting the nurses who had been caring for him, insisting they hated members of his faith.

Driverless Car Runs Wild in Hyattsville

Perils Child, Chases Scissors Grinder Into a Drain Pipe

An auto unparked itself in Hyattsville, Md., yesterday and, in a wild solo run, provided the following forms of excitement:

Twice crossed a heavily traveled thoroughfare.

Crashed a telephone pole.

Narrowly missed a child playing on the sidewalk.

Chased an unidentified scissors grinder through a drain pipe.

Parked on Incline

The car had been parked by W. J. Bailey, Petersburg, Va., on a steep incline a few doors from the home of Milton M. Mister, 813 Bayly avenue. Bailey said he had left the machine in gear but in some manner the gears became disengaged and the car rolled backwards 200 yards down Bayly avenue and across Oakwood road, a main thoroughfare, with enough momentum to carry it 100 yards up a grade on the other side.

On the first crossing of Oakwood road the driver of a grocery truck barely was able to maneuver himself out of a collision. On the second crossing of the thoroughfare, opposing traffic offered no obstacle as the machine swerved for the curb.

The telephone pole was struck a glancing blow and 5-year-old Betty King, daughter of W. E. King, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. employe, of 811 Bayly avenue, missed death or injury by inches as the car headed straight for the scissors grinder.

Grinder Smashed

He leaped into a culvert as the auto smashed his grinder. The car changed its course again and seemed about to trap the man in what appeared to be a place of certain safety, so he dodged into a drain pipe and scrambled its entire length under the roadway as sure precaution against further pursuit.

The auto at this juncture presented a picture of frustration. It stood on its end in the culvert.

'Parked' Car Does a 'Jack and Jill'—Endangers Two

Like the two who ran down the hill, this auto, listed to W. J. Bailey, of Petersburg, Va., was left parked on the crest of the hill on Bayly avenue, Hyattsville, Md. The brakes apparently became released and the car rolled down the hill, up another, and into the ditch. Betty King, 5, of 811 Bayly avenue, was sitting on a culvert with a scissor grinder, and both jumped out of its path just in time

Federal Writers Complete Picture Book on Capital

The publication of a 180-page picture-book guide to Washington, prepared by the Federal Writers' Project, was announced yesterday by Howard O. Hunter, acting Works Projects Commissioner. The volume, containing 135 pictures of Capital scenes, was sponsored by the Guild's Committee for Federal Writers' Publications, headed by Columnist Franklin P. Adams.

The book contains views of the Capitol in 1831, 1861 and 1939, air views of the Federal Triangle, various murals in Government buildings, and replicas of the l'Enfant and McMillan plans for the city. Brief chapters describe the development of the physical lay-out of the city and contain a history of the Government buildings.

The album, according to its preface, is intended for visitors to the city, who may thus have a photographic index of the Capital's sights.

No Interest Cut In Baby Bonds, Postal Savings

High Federal officials said yesterday that they did not intend to reduce the interest paid on postal savings and baby bonds in spite of drastic reductions in recent years of the yield from most investments.

Two per cent is paid on postal savings deposits everywhere, except in New Jersey, and the discounts on United States savings (baby) bonds are figured so as to give an investor the equivalent of 2.9 per cent interest if he holds them to their 10-year maturity.

Sen. Capper Asks Public Defender In D. C. Court

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, yesterday introduced a new bill to provide for the appointment of a public defender in the District Court and stated that the legislation has the approval of the District Bar Association and labor and civic organizations.

"Despite the claim made by some lawyers and judges that the accused is always amply safeguarded under our law," he said, "and that the conviction of an innocent person is impossible, the fact remains that striking instances of miscarriage of justice constantly are brought to public attention," he said.

Scientist Clocks Fruit Flies

Cambridge, Mass., July 24 (AP).—Winged insects with "cruising speeds" up to 350 wing beats a second are making test flights before a high-speed camera to help a Harvard scientist get the lowdown on "this extraordinarily rapid physical exercise which has no counterpart at all among mammalian animals."

Biologist Leigh E. Chadwick, looking over the field of fliers in his laboratory speedway, rated them about as follows:

Drosophila, or fruit fly: Odds-on favorite. Can do 13,000 beats a minute. Walk-away on a hot day. Likes a crowd.

Bumble bee: Has done 240 beats a second. May surprise. But sometimes stops flying under experimental conditions.

House flies: Often in the money with 160 beats a second. Very shifty.

Honey bee: A comer if pushed. Clocked at 160 to 220 beats in trials.

Hummingbird: Grandstander. Fifty beats. Will sag.

Moths and butterflies: No bet. Lazy.

Longshots: Wasps, dragon flies, cicadas, grasshoppers.

Plot to Blow Up Parliament Charged to IRA

Carefully Worked Out Plans Discovered by British Home Office

London, July 24.—A modern counterpart of the abortive seventeenth century "gunpowder plot" to blow up the houses of Parliament was attributed today by Home Secretary Sir Samuel Hoare to terrorists of the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

Sir Samuel told the Commons of the plot today when he reported the government had discovered a document which he called "plans" and which he said outlined virtually all terrorist acts of the past six months.

Sir Samuel added that terrorism in England was being "stimulated by foreign organizations" and was timed to coincide with the international crisis.

Carefully Worked Out Plan

Sir Samuel described "plans" as "not the kind of irresponsible, melodramatic document that one sometimes discovers in searches of this sort.

"It is a very carefully worked out staff plan . . . setting out in detail the way in which a campaign of sabotage could be successfully carried out against this country."

The moved second reading of an emergency bill designed to help crush the IRA activities which he said might become extremely serious in the event of war. The bill was passed on second reading and was advanced to third reading.

Scotland Yard Prepared

Scotland Yard, meanwhile, prepared to start a roundup immediately when the measure becomes law. The detectives have 5,000 IRA members and sympathizers under observation, a government informant said, and about 400 may be deported.

New Wheat Supply Record Forecast

By the Associated Press

The Agriculture Department estimated yesterday that there would be a new record supply of wheat in the world's bread basket for the year which began July 1.

The department tentatively placed prospective world supply for 1939-40 at about 5,290,000,000 bushls, or about 120,000,000 bushels above the record suplies during the preceding 12 months.

Ramspeck Offers Measure to Avoid Wage-Hour Fight

In a last-minute effort to obtain relief for "hardship cases" under the wage-hour act, Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, yesterday introduced a "nontroversial" bill to amend the present law.

Omitting all mention of the proposed bitterly debated agricultural exemptions that have tied up wage-hour legislation for months, Ramspeck's bill would withdraw from full protection of the law certain white-collar workers, rural telephone employes, some minors, rural homeworkers, telegraph messengers and other groups.

The question of agricultural exemptions, however, will be raised at a special meeting of the Rules Committee this morning, at which Wage-Hour Administrator Andrews, Chairman Norton of the Labor Committee and Representative Barden (Democrat), of North Carolina, author of far-reaching amendments to the law, will be heard.

Coach said, "and we expect to be able to give definite approval to the plans at that time." Next step will be a meeting of the full recreation board, which consists of the District Commissioners and three members of the board of education, Sharpe, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle and John H. Wilson.

With approval of Barrett's plans by the full board, the city's playground and community center supervisors next Tuesday would become directly responsible to the four assistant recreation directors, two white and two colored, who would work under Barrett's supervision.

Candidates for the four assistant directorships have not yet been considered, Col McCoach said.

Danzig Plans To Draft Jews For Labor

By the United Press.

Danzig, July 24.—The Danzig Nazi Senate is preparing to draft the Free City's remaining Jews into labor service to replace 4,000 German residents conscripted in recent weeks for police and home defense services, it was learned tonight.

A shortage of labor prompted consideration of the draft of Jews, who have been excluded from the labor market since last November.

About 1,700 Jews remain in Danzig from 11,000 who were here in 1933. Emigration has been proceeding at regular pace and Jewish leaders hope that most of those remaining in the Free City will be able to depart for new homes abroad within 18 months or two years.

More Lenient Than Reich

A decree three weeks ago forbidding Danzig residents to export foreign exchange struck a heavy blow at Jewish emigration, but Danzig still is more lenient than the Reich.

In March some 420 Jews went to Palestine. A group of 100 children recently arrived in England. Early in July 50 Jews went to Shanghai by way of Marseilles, and 50 hope to sail for Canada next month.

Jewish leaders said they hoped to send groups to Shanghai every two weeks. Twenty families are going to Bolivia this week and 100 will go to the United States. About 300 have their papers in order for emigration to the United States, but must wait their turn under the quota, which is 100 per year.

Denies Importing Nazis

Berlin, July 24 (AP).—The Danzig Nazi leader, Albert Forster, declared anew tonight "our unshakeable belief that Adolf Hitler will lead these 400,000 countrymen separated from the Reich into the motherland."

Writing in Hitler's newspaper, Voelkischer Beobachter, he said preparations had been made in the Free City "to make any coup de main or surprise attack hopeless."

"Even if we are separated from the Reich . . . we would like to let all inimically minded statesmen of the western democracies and in Poland know that Adolf Hitler, the leader of the German people, is also our leader," he declared.

Border "Violation" Reported

Forster said the report that German soldiers had been brought into Danzig was "one among many of the lies spread in the foreign press.

"The entire world, and above all our Polish neighbors, should know that there are enough men in Danzig, determined and courageous every minute, to defend their homeland to the last drop of blood if it must be."

DNB, the official German news agency, reported from Renneberg a new "border violation by a Polish reconnaissance group" which resulted in an exchange of rifle fire with Danzig border patrols. No injuries were reported.

D. C. Auto Deaths Up 13% in Year; Ranks 42d in U. S.

Automobile fatalities in the District increased in the first five months of 1939 by 13 per cent over the figure for the corresponding period last year. This places the Capital among States showing the poorest accident prevention record, the Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. reported yesterday.

Statistics from 46 States indicate a general decrease in traffic fatalities of 9 per cent from January through May, 1939, compared to the first five months of last year. Virginia, sixteenth on the list, shows a 12 per cent decrease. Maryland, thirty-third, showed an increase in deaths of 4 per cent.

The District, ranking forty-second, had 31 fatalities in the period under study in 1938, compared to 35 during the same time this year.

U.S. Silver Goes To London Market

Chase National Bank has taken the lead in the foreign sales.

Profit in Shipping

It costs about three-eighths of a cent an ounce to ship silver to London. Thus, when the London price is more than three-eighths of a cent above the Treasury price, a profit can be made.

Whether the foreign selling of silver indicates that the Treasury will slacken its foreign silver buying depends on further developments. Secretary Morgenthau's avowed policy is to continue to carry out the law.

The Treasury has not raised its price above the London price in order to keep the metal moving to this side of the Atlantic. The reason, it is intimated, is that the present London price is regarded as abnormal.

Union Services Planned at Herndon

Union services will be held in the Herndon (Va.) Congregational Church on Sunday, July 30, at 11 a. m. The Rev. Marshall Milton, of the Herndon St. Timothy's Episcopal Church, will preach.

Others who will take part in the service are the Rev. H. H. Bear, of the Presbyterian Church; the Rev. W. Boyd Bryant, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the Rev. William T. Winter, of the Congregational Church.

Special music is being arranged by members of the choirs in the various churches, with Miss Maud Yount as organist.

P. U. C. to Permit Streetcar Terminal

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday refused to act on a petition protesting plans for construction of a bus and street car terminal at Georgia and Eastern avenues northwest, signed by 20 residents of the neighborhood.

District zoning regulations, the P. U. C. pointed out, allow erection of passenger stations in residential areas. Signers of the petition contended the project would reduce property values on adjoining streets.

Factory Automobile Sales Exceed 1938

Factory sales of automobiles for the first six months of 1939 totaled 1,577,690 units compared with 936,517 in the corresponding period of 1938, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins reported yesterday.

Factory sales of passenger cars last month aggregated 246,704 units, as compared with 136,531 in June last year.

Japan Plans Naval Show Off Sakhalin

Assembles Fleet for War Maneuvers to Protect Oil Rights

By International News Service.

Tokyo, July 24.—Japan tonight prepared for a possible naval showdown with Soviet Russia as the Anglo-Japanese round-table conference to settle the Tientsin blockade dispute got under way with two sessions.

Having won from Britain written acknowledgment of her "special requirements" in China, Japan assembled her combined fleet for wartime maneuvers to be staged principally in waters adjoining those of the northern (Russian) half of Sakhalin Island.

Soviets Take Grave View

Significance of this step was indicated plainly by Rear Admiral Mitsumasa Yonai, Japanese naval minister, who declared:

"The Japanese navy is taking the necessary steps with firm determination for the purpose of safeguarding Japan's legitimate rights and interests in Sakhalin Island."

[Soviet Russia tonight flatly rejected for the second time a Japanese protest over restrictions on Japanese oil and coal concessions on Sakhalin, it was announced in Moscow by Tass, official Soviet news agency.

[It was obvious that Soviet government circles were taking a grave view of Japanese naval movements and of the continued fighting on the Outer Mongolian-Manchukuoan border.—Editor's Note.]

The Japanese press, meanwhile, alleged that Soviet authorities of northern Sakhalin are exerting increasing pressure on Japanese oil and coal concessions there with the view of confiscating them in violation of a Russo-Japanese treaty.

On the battle fronts in China proper and on the frontier between Outer Mongolia and Manchukuo, Japanese armies drove forward in a series of savage thrusts designed to convince Chungking and Moscow that Tokyo is able to handle all her enemies at once.

(The London Daily Telegraph quoted the Vladivostok newspaper Red Banner as stating the Japanese have 450,000 regular soldiers, thousands of planes, 3,000 miles of strategically-built railways and 12,000 miles of military highways in Manchukuo ready for an invasion of eastern Siberia whic hwas declared to be "imminent").

The Anglo-Japanese conference began at 9 o'clock this morning, with delegates of both powers from Tientsin and North China present. After a luncheon adjournment, a second session was held in the afternoon during which it was authoritatively stated "smooth progress" was registered.

A riotous mob of 600 stoned British buildings at Tangku, the port of Tientsin, and the British warship Sandwich was rushed to the scene. This appeared to underline the avowed determination of Japanese army leaders in North China to maintain pressure on the British until the Tokyo conference produces an agreement satisfactory to them.

Japanese Close Pearl River

Hongkong (Tuesday), July 25 (U.P.).—Japanese authorities at Canton announced that they were closing the Pearl River there, beginning today, for "'approximately a fortnight," due to military operations in the Pearl River delta. British feared that this might indicate possible blockading of the British concession on Shameen Island, at Canton.

Britain Recognizes Japanese Rights

Lord Halifax in the House of Lords gave similar assurances that Hudson's talks had been "unofficial," and "in no sense unusual."

[As if to emphasize that appeasement had been buried, according to The Post's special correspondent, Chamberlain also held a meeting of cabinet ministers and departmental heads concerned with defense. They discussed the report of Sir Edmund Ironside on his trip to Poland last week and reviewed arrangements for the military co-operation of the Anglo-French peace front.

[This afternoon the foreign office pursued the "anti-appeasement" attitude by stating that "some progress" had been achieved in discussions on the problem of bringing Russia into a defensive alliance with Britain and France.

[Further speculation over possible Anglo-German negotiations was aroused, however, by the arrival in London tonight of a new German "mystery envoy," Dr. M. Martens, a lieutenant of Wohlthat, International News Service reported. Martens was said to carry fresh instructions, the nature of which was secret.—Editor's note.]

The Japanese Embassy issued the text of the agreement as Chamberlain spoke. The agreement is the basis for negotiations now going on regarding the Tientsin dispute.

Special Interests Omitted

The text follows:

"His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom fully recognize the actual situation in China where hostilities on a large scale are in progress and note that as long as that state of affairs continues to exist the Japanese forces in China have special requirements for the purpose of safeguarding their own security and maintaining public order in the regions under their control and that they have to suppress or remove any such acts or causes as will obstruct them or benefit their enemy.

"His Majesty's government have no intention of countenancing any acts or measures prejudicial to the attainment of the above-mentioned objects by the Japanese forces and they will take this opportunity to confirm their policy in this respect by making it plain to British authorities and British nationals in China that they should refrain from such acts and measures."

Halifax gave the following supplementary points of agreement:

It was no part of the intention of the Japanese government to preclude His Majesty's government from making representations on any case that might arise.

His Majesty's government made it clear that in their view nothing in the formula affected the position and obligations of other powers. This view was considered by both parties as self-evident.

His Majesty's Ambassador has represented to the Japanese government the great importance of discouraging press recriminations and exaggerated claims which can only prejudice the results of the Tientsin negotiations on local issues now about to open.

His Majesty's Ambassador has made strong representations on the subject of anti-British agitation. It is to be anticipated that as a result of the agreement which has now been reached this agitation will cease.

"Meanwhile, the Japanese prime minister is reported to have said that the Japanese government, now that they had fixed their policy, could control agitation not in accordance with it," he added.

To Control Agitation

Halifax and Chamberlain, in virtually identical replies to reports of the German loan plan, said Hudson told them that the question of removing existing trade barriers had been discussed with Wohlthat, and that this led to talk of financial steps which might have to be taken to overcome the difficulties.

Any views expressed were Hudson's own, Halifax said, and added that Hudson had emphasized this in his conversation with Wohlthat.

"There is no justification whatever for stating or assuming that these remarks arising in the course of an unofficial conversation constitute a proposal for a loan by this country to Germany," Halifax declared.

The prime minister indicated, however, that even he did not know the whole story of the Hudson-Wohlthat talks.

Asked who was responsible for leakage of the loan scheme talks to the press, Chamberlain said:

"That is a question to which I would very much like to know the answer myself."

Reliable reports in lobbies of Parliament, however, said Hudson had no intention of resigning as earlier reported.

China Warns Britain

By International News Service.

Chungking, China (Tuesday), July 25.—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek in a statement today indirectly warned Great Britain and Japan that China does not propose to become a Far Eastern Czecho-Slovakia.

He expressed confidence, however, that Britain "will not make concessions to Japan which would be in conflict with the Nine-Power Treaty," but emphasized:

"Any understanding reached by outside powers affecting the national interests of China without China's assent would be invalid."

'Most Serious' Strife Reported In South Spain

3d General Believed Dismissed as Factions Bring on Showdown

By the United Press

Gibraltar, July 24.—Disorders in Seville and other parts of southern Spain were reported tonight in the wake of Gen. Franco's demotion of Gen. Gonzalo Queipo de Llano and Gen. Juan Yaque.

There was no confirmation of the reports, which were meager and without official sources, and the Spanish government issued a blanket denial that numerous demobilized officers had been recalled to the colors.

Information seeping through the tightly sealed Spanish frontier from La Linea, just north of Gibraltar, said that Seville communications were cut, roads were under heavy guard and the situation "most serious."

Solchaga Reported Dismissed

Queipo de Llano's removal was reported to have been engineered by Ramon Serrano Suner, minister of interior and brother-in-law of Franco.

[International News Service reported from the French border that Gen. Juan Solchaga, another civil war leader, had been dismissed as commander of the Galician army corps.

[Spanish sources in Paris tonight expressed the belief dismissal of Gens. Yague and Queipo de Llano was bringing about a long-delayed showdown between two forces that have contended since 1937 for control of the Nationalist movement, according to the Associated Press.

Queipo de Llano in Burgos

[On one side information gathered in Paris indicated, stand Serrano Suner, with the Falangist, or Fascist party, and a few army leaders backing his program of strict dictatorship and close ties with Rome.

[On the other stand the Carlists, a greater part of the "old school" army officers, and numbers of dissatisfied elements whose strength has been increased by a post-war shortage of certain foods in parts of Spain.—Editor's note.]

Reports abroad that Queipo de Llano was under arrest were denied by Spanish officials, and Eleanor Packard, United Press correspondent in Burgos, found Queipo de Llano there tonight, sitting in the lobby of the Maria Isabel Hotel dressed in civilian garb.

Many Factions Against Suner

Carlists, Catholics, Monarchists and a section of the army in Spain, as well as many refugees abroad, were said to be joining in opposition to the reported attempts of Serrano Suner to make himself premier, relegating Franco to a role of regent without direct supervision over the government.

Ohio Pastor Reported Freed By Arabs as Ransom Is Sent

By the Associated Press

Jerusalem, July 24.—A donkey trader declared tonight that the Rev. G. R. Goldner, of Ohio, had been released by his Arab abductors while efforts were being made to pay a partial ransom through a Bedouin tribesman.

While the Bedouin messenger slipped out of the old city of Bethlehem with the money for the wandering tribe which kidnaped the clergyman last Tuesday, this story—unconfirmed from any other source—was received here:

Ishak Attia, the donkey trader, said he rented to Goldner and his father, Dr. Jacob Goldner, also a preacher, two donkeys for their trip to Marsaba Greek Monastery last Tuesday.

When young Goldner was held for ransom and his father was released to arrange payment of the money, the donkeys were kept by the kidnapers.

Ishak began a search and said he found the Arabs, who told him they had handed the younger Goldner over to two monks of the Grecian Monastery, between Hebron and Bethlehem, on condition that he not enter Jerusalem before dawn tomorrow.

Jerusalem officials and friends of the Goldners, meanwhile, were increasingly confident the young minister would appear soon.

A careful check of monasteries was begun as a consequence of the donkeyman's tale, while word was awaited also from the Bedouin ransom messenger.

Demands Reduced

The sum entrusted to the messenger by A. L. Miller, general secretary of the Jerusalem Y. M. C. A., was not announced, but it was said to represent a "down payment," with the remainder to be delivered upon the safe return of Goldner.

A friend of the clergyman said further that the kidnapers had reduced their demands to $2,500 from the $5,000 asked originally.

Earlier today the Bedouin arrived with a message from the 29-year-old churchman to his father.

"I am okay," the younger Goldner wrote. "If you are too ill to come the gang swears by Allah that someone with piastares—money—will receive safe conduct."

The message was the second signed by Goldner and delivered here. One received by his father last Friday said he was well and receiving good treatment from his captors.

Church Transmits Funds

Cleveland, July 24 (AP).—Church officials announced today they were depositing, for transmittal to Jerusalem, "sufficient funds" to pay the ransom demanded for release of the Rev. Gerould R. Goldner.

Falangist Executed For Killing Carlist

Hendaye, France, July 24 (AP).—Reports from Spain today said a Falangist sergeant who shot and killed a Carlist because the latter cried "Long live the king," had been executed at Irun.

Shooting early this month started a series of clashes between Falangists and Carlists, forcing authorities to augment military forces in the provinces of Navarre and Guipuzcoa.

Wohlthat Hadn't Right to Talk About Loan, Say Reich Officials

German Industrialists Though, Reported Regretful Both Governments So Flatly Rejected Plan; Hitler's Paper Calls It 'Insane'

By the Associated Press

Berlin, July 24.—German authorities tonight declared Dr. Helmuth Wohlthat was authorized neither to discuss nor to carry back to Berlin any plan for "buying off" Germany by economic concessions or a loan on his recent London visit.

So eager was the German Government to disassociate Wohlthat, negotiator of important German trade treaties and Field Marshal Goering's right hand man in economic matters, from connection with such a reported British-discussed appeasement plan that an official government denial was issued through the government news agency, DNB.

A foreign office spokesman said Wohlthat had met R. S. Hudson, British Secretary for overseas Trade, and other important Englishmen at their request and termed the conversations a purely "private exchange of views concerning economic problems."

Industrialists Regretful

[At the same time, according to The Post's Special Correspondent in Berlin, there were signs some similar plan may still belong in the rapidly dwindling list of possible programs for negotiations between Europe's two armed camps. Industrial circles expressed disappointment that the Hudson-Wohlthat plan had been rejected so flatly by both governments and Wohlthat has postponed a planned visit to Spain in order to report to Fuehrer Hitler.]

German newspapers interpreted the British-Japanese agreement on Far Eastern negotiations as a slap at British prestige, and as a sign of optimism over Soviet-German negotiations.

The press also told Britain that Germany never would let disarmament, colonies or other questions become questions of economic bartering.

Plan Called Insane

Adolf Hitler's Voelkischer Beobachter branded as "insane" the plan said to have been discussed in London for a loan to Germany in return for a pledge of partial disarmament.

"Details (of the plan) fully confirm the impression of unexampled nerve," the paper said. "In a shameless and saucy tone German affairs are talked about as though a defeated opponent were to be dictated to."

The Next Step

Political leaders who have been working for a Presidential primaries law for the District are undoubtedly rejoicing over passage of the Hatch bill and the President's apparent intention to sign it. For Washington delegations to national party conventions can no longer be made up of hand-picked officials certain to do the bidding of the Administration in power.

So far as the District's foremost political problem is concerned, however, the Hatch bill is only a half-way measure. It will forbid non-policy-making office-holders to speak for the rank and file of party members in Washington at the national conventions. But it will not prevent usurpation of that right by self-appointed politicians outside of the Government service.

Although Washington is denied representation in Congress and has no local government of its own, both major parties grant the District a voice in the selection of Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates. But in effect even this minor right is nullified by the failure of Congress to provide some means whereby the rank and file of party members here may elect their delegates to the national conventions. Delegates who speak in party conclaves in the name of the District may actually reflect the views of only a few politicians who have set themselves up as leaders.

A bill to correct this inexcusable situation has long been before Congress. But it merely occupies a pigeonhole. The remarkable success of the Hatch bill should be a signal for revival of the proposed primaries act so that it may be passed in plenty of time to permit the election of party delegates in the District for the 1940 conventions.

Biting Birthright

In England, recently, the learned Mr. Justice Branson of the Surrey Assizes ruled in effect that every camel is entitled to a maximum of one bite out of practically any part of any human anatomy to which it may take a fancy.

In so deciding the judge reversed the decision of a lower court imposing damages amounting to some $1,500 on a menagerie proprietor. It appears that a visitor to the menagerie took it into his head to feed apples to one of the camels. The camel ate three of them with what witnesses agreed were exemplary table manners. But in its greediness for the fourth it chewed up along with the apple a considerable portion of its benefactor's hand. This was considered rank ingratitude and the lawsuit followed.

At the Surrey Assizes the behavior pattern of the species camel was gone into quite extensively. Character witnesses were called by both sides and for a time the testimony pro and con was so confusing as almost to remind one of the mad scene in Hamlet.

Pol.: By the mass, and 'tis like a camel indeed.

Ham.: Methinks it is like a weasel.

Pol.: It is backed like a weasel.

Ham.: Or like a whale?

Pol.: Very like a whale.

Veterans of Gen. Allenby's army testified they had become well acquainted with the camel during the Mesopotamian campaign and had formed very low opinions of its moral character. It does not appear that counsel for the defense sought to offset this evidence by reading into the record any of the several eloquent testimonials to the nobility of the camel by distinguished British poets, including Robert Browning and James Thomson. They were satisfied to produce as an expert witness the former consultant on camels to the Government of the Punjab. This authority not only spoke feelingly of the high moral character of camels in general but declared the camel was the first of all animals to become domesticated.

This seems to have clinched the matter for Mr. Justice Branson. If, said that jurist, the camel is a domestic animal then it has the same right as dogs, cats, goats, sheep, cows, pigs and chickens, to take one bite with impunity.

So far as we know, our own camels here in the National Zoo have never bitten anybody. Thus, they may be considered to have one bite apiece coming to them. The right is probably shared by their first cousins, the llamas. Biting, however, is strictly forbidden to lions, tigers, panthers and leopards. The giraffe presents something of a problem. It was formerly considered to be part domesticated camel, part savage leopard —hence its ancient name, camelopard. That might seem to entitle it merely to one-half of one bite. Still, since the biting, if any, would be done not by the part resembling a leopard, but by the part that resembles a camel, the giraffe's claim to something more than a nibble could be plausibly argued.

If anybody feels like being bitten to make a test case of the matter, perhaps the Zoo authorities could be persuaded to lend a ladder for the purpose.

Mr. Hudson's Suggestion

Official German statistics show that in May the public employment exchanges in that country listed 1,700,000 vacant positions, as compared with 987,000 applicants for jobs. Since then the Assistant Minister of Labor has estimated the Reich's "labor deficit" at 1,000,000 workers, this being after the absorption of all who had been unemployed in Austria and Czecho-Slovakia. And recently the German universities closed two weeks ahead of schedule, so that some 25,000 students might help to meet the acute labor shortage on the farms.

The Berlin government, which certainly does not exaggerate the intensification of economic strain in Germany, is now admitting that in nearly every important line of production there is serious shortage, both of materials and of men. It is announced that the coal industry, on which German industrial power is based, urgently needs 50,000 more miners. If the program of self-sufficiency in products made synthetically from coal is carried out, the man-power shortage in this one industry will by the end of this year be around 150,000.

Instance after instance could be cited of the mounting difficulties which obstruct not merely the grandiose hopes of Hitler's Four-Year Plan, but in some cases the very continuation of production in vital peacetime industries. Cumulatively this evidence, plus the relatively poor prospects for the coming harvest, is a strong factor in the argument of those who anticipate continued peace. Except as a desperate and almost imperative gamble a nation in Germany's present position would not dream of waging a major war. The exception, however, is important.

The effort to prepare for war has already strained Germany's economy to the limit, perhaps beyond it. Industrial production, mostly of the preparedness variety, is now one-third greater than it was in 1928. But under the strain the national economy is cracking. Cattle are being slaughtered because farmers have not the help to milk them. Housing construction lags because builders cannot obtain materials. Railroads are curtailing trains because of fuel shortage. And this in spite of every effort to whip German labor to maximum efficiency at lengthened working hours.

This is the situation with Germany at peace. Should war break out the strain would, of course, be greatly intensified. The shortage of man power and the shortage of materials would immediately become more pronounced. And the longer fighting continued the greater would be the certainty of a collapse which is by no means impossible under the present condition of armed and uneasy peace.

It is against this background that the current British move to extend a helping hand to Germany must be visualized.

In the House of Commons yesterday Prime Minister Chamberlain declared that "there is no proposal for a German loan" now under consideration. He further stated that recent conversations between Robert S. Hudson, secretary of the Department of Overseas Trade, and Dr. Helmuth Wohlthat, of the German Economics Ministry, were wholly informal in character. But Mr. Chamberlain carefully did not disown the negotiations which obviously have been initiated. "I do not see any particular harm," he said, "in this particular conversation."

There is not merely no harm; there is an infinity of potential good in discussions which, like those between Mr. Hudson and Herr Wohlthat, look towards a constructive solution of the frightful tension which now exists in Europe. It is from every viewpoint wholly rational to present to Germany an alternative to the ruinous road down which the Reich is speeding. And only those who in their hearts desire another world war, with all its incalculable train of ruin for civilization, could possibly condemn Mr. Hudson's admirable exploration in behalf of peace.

Even if the tentative conversations undertaken were wholly official in character they would indicate no weakness on the part of the British government. By deed and word that government has fully demonstrated its grim determination to check further German aggression. It is probably the British attitude—it is most certainly not the position taken by the United States—which has held the Nazi extremists in check in recent months. To couple this resistance to aggression with a calm and dispassionate consideration of how Germany's desperate economic problem can be peacefully ameliorated is the acme of statesmanship. And the opinion of those who cannot see this is an opinion which Mr. Chamberlain would do well to disregard.

As Mr. Hudson is quoted as saying, an international solution of the German economic problem can come now or it can come after another war has laid Europe in ashes. But come it must. When Hitler told his people that they must "export or die" he voiced a simple, inescapable and fundamental truth. This truth must be squarely confronted by all who do not want to see a solution postponed, but only postponed, by the intervention of another war.

On June 29 the British Foreign Minister, Viscount Halifax, told Germany that "any day" the self-imposed isolation of that nation "can be ended by a policy of co-operation." In the person of Mr. Hudson an officer of the British government has now taken steps to give this generality practical effect.

In so doing he has done much to show the German people that there is a way out, a way infinitely more promising to them and to all mankind than is the hopeless blind alley of war. Whether Germany will respond to such suggested conditions as drastic arms limitation and re-establishment of a Czecho-Slovak republic remains to be seen. But at least Mr. Hudson may feel satisfied that his efforts have the esteem and admiration of all thoughtful men.

Unimpressive Appeal

In appealing to Congress for revision of the recent WPA act, the United States Conference of Mayors declares that it is not trying "merely to dodge a responsibility, or to shift a burden to the Federal Government." But its broadside attack upon the WPA reform measure certainly betrays an unwillingness on the part of the mayors to meet the relief issue squarely.

There is undoubtedly good reason for the mayors' concern. They realize that the new policy of requiring 25 per cent local contributions to WPA projects will unsettle city budgets. Some cities are forbidden by legal restrictions to increase their debts. Their tax rates are already high. So it is natural that their executive officials should see a dilemma in this requirement for higher local contributions, and in the increased direct relief load resulting from curtailment of WPA rolls. But they are looking at only one side of a problem that is baffling to Congress as well as to city councils.

Nothing can be gained now by harking back to the naive assumption of 1935 that the Federal Government could provide WPA jobs for all the needy unemployed who are able to work. Despite the enormous sums spent by the WPA, that objective has never been attained. Congress now realizes that, instead of trying to make work for every man without a job, it must gradually curtail costly relief projects and turn back to State and local governments a larger share of the responsibility of saving the destitute from distress.

The present WPA act is a courageous move in that direction. Municipal authorities are complaining, through the Conference of Mayors, that they are not yet ready to assume this larger obligation. But they have been making the same protest for years. It is crystal clear that they never will make arrangements to take over more of the relief burden unless compelled to do so by necessity. Their present task is not to forecast calamity or apply pressure for a larger Federal relief fund than the President requested, but to buckle down to the work of adjusting their own programs to the new law.

The fallacy of the mayor's argument is its assumption that the Federal Government has unlimited resources to be devoted to the creation of relief jobs. Actually, the need for curtailment of Federal expenditures is no less acute than is the need for economy in the average city hall. So if the new WPA program should collapse, as the Conference of Mayors predicts, the responsibility for that failure will rest squarely upon State and local governments.

Cultural Interchange

True fellowship among the nations of the New World cannot rest solely on a political foundation even though it is reinforced by important and steadily increasing economic ties. Any sound basis of inter-American friendship must also include a large element of cultural understanding.

This fact is now pretty thoroughly realized and, what is more, acted upon. In this particular the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation can lay claim to being somewhat of a pioneer. In 1929 it began to grant fellowships to the artists, writers and scholars of Argentina, Chile, Cuba, Mexico and Puerto Rico with the avowed purpose, as stated by the donors, former Senator and Mrs. Simon Guggenheim, of promoting a "better understanding among the citizens of the American republics." In the last ten years 87 Latin-American fellowships have been granted.

The foundation now proposes to go a step further. Fellowships are to be extended to four additional countries of the Western Hemisphere, namely, Brazil, Peru, Uruguay and Canada.

This move deserves high commendation. In some parts of the world, artistic and intellectual enterprise is being steadily restricted. It is all the more important that, on this side of the water, arts and letters should remain free and unfettered by boundary lines and nationalistic preconceptions.

A fellow has written the Governor of Kansas applying for a job as cyclone-tamer. He claims he can tie knots in a cyclone's tail. The fellow must be a bit eccentric.

"When you get mad, you should immediately go out and kick something," advises a psychologist. Yes; preferably yourself.

Not Being Railroaded

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to take issue with the letter of Mortimer Riemer, secretary of the National Lawyers Guild, which appeared in The Post of July 24. Mr. Riemer states that "the House held perfunctory hearings on the measure," meaning the Walter-Logan bill to curb the loose rule-making practices of administrative agencies of the Federal Government.

These hearings were by no means perfunctory. Mr. Reimer ought to know that the opponents of the bill were given a chance to present their views, for he was one of the witnesses who testified against the bill. The Judiciary Committee quite obviously was not impressed by his arguments. But that does not alter the fact that he and other opponents were given ample opportunity to present their case.

So it is not fair to say that this bill is being railroaded through Congress. The subject has been given careful consideration by both the Senate and House Judiciary committees for several years, and the present bill is merely a culmination of efforts to devise a systematic procedure for regulatory bodies that will prevent them from encroaching upon the constitutional rights of citizens.

Spartan Life

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I note in press "Nazi Temperance Drive," begun July 13, by formation of a "State Bureau Against the Dangers of Alcohol and Tobacco," Hitler, who neither smokes nor drinks, held up as model.

This gives me pause, for history teaches this truth—it is during periods when the anti-degeneracy movement runs strong that nations wax strong. Asceticism usually makes "a going concern" of a nation. Rome had the strictest moral code there on her Seven Hills, and a self-disciplined citizenry obeying the code. Thus she rose to power.

Augustus, when he revived Rome, said the first thing to do was to revive the old asceticism, and when his daughter offended by disregarding the law against adultery, that old Roman went before the Roman Senate and asked that his daughter be exiled.

There's the stuff that makes a nation go—adherence to a strict code.

Cromwell told his soldiers he could not win freedom, democracy, with a profligate army. He called for men free from bad habits, drunkenness, and so forth, free from slavery within, if slavery without, oppression of King, was to end. He reared Ironsides.

The Puritan instinct—that won for us freedom—was a strong anti-degeneracy sense; it was really a strong will to survive. And it knew this will must live in each individual man. Looseness, laziness, material grabbing of more and more gadgets do not win the race. They lose it.

America—turned off the soil into big heterogeneous cities—has lost the will to survive. The totalitarian states have it. They ask of themselves self-discipline, self-sacrifice, a man free within from habits that weaken. Beware America!

Alien Untouchables?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I not only agree with John B. Blackmore in his complaint as to the proposed legislation pending to further ill-treat aliens, but I would like to be informed through your columns as to what the inalienable rights are an alien can claim by the Constitution of the United States.

I would like to see some society or league formed by aliens to safeguard the few remaining rights left to aliens. There are enormous numbers of aliens who are legally domiciled and yet disbarred from becoming naturalized citizens, and there are great numbers of aliens eligible to naturalization but lack the necessary fees. Then there are numbers of aliens living in this country under supposition that the treaties existing between their national land and the U. S. A. entitles these aliens to the same rights accorded to American citizens in their own foreign countries as per these treaties.

If nothing is done, we aliens will become pariahs and untouchables like those of India. ALIEN.

Charity And Home

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With reference to another complaint in your letters to the editor column in today's Post, by Mr. Joseph Kaufman, criticizing us and others for a lack of "compassion" for the 907 German refugees on the St. Louis refused temporary admission into Cuba, the 207 refused entrance to Mexico and the 1,400 turned back the other day by Palestine, may I point out that President Bru of Cuba jailed several immigration officials for having received $165 (plus $5 for a receipt) graft for every one of the 907 and that the 1,400 were trying to commit the felony of entering Palestine illegally?

In Spain today Franco is trying before court-martials thousands and sending the convicted Anarchists, Communists and other criminal radicals to their death. We certainly have all the law-breakers, Anarchists, Communists and other radicals, even native born, that we can comfortably get along with, without importing any more. We also have all the poverty-stricken, ill-fed, ill-housed, ill-clothed and underprivileged we can care for. Charity should begin at home.

"Charity In Disguise"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The present furor over the new WPA regulations discloses an apparent misconception in labor circles regarding the nature and purpose of the WPA.

The fact seems to be overlooked that those on WPA rolls do not have real jobs, permanent jobs; that the WPA was never intended to provide such employment; that most of these projects are "made work," made for the express purpose of helping those who have been unable to support themselves in other ways; that, under normal conditions, most of this work would not be done at this time, if at all; that, in short, this work is merely a form of charity in disguise and a burden on the taxpayer, and that therefore those on WPA rolls cannot reasonably expect to enjoy the same "living standards" which they might enjoy if they had real jobs and had found their places in the Nation's economy. The position of these protestants seems to be very much like that of the panhandler who objects to the quality or the quantity of the "hand-out." People who are not able to support themselves and have to be supported by others, are hardly in a position to make demands upon their benefactors.

Power to Strike

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am a retired Government clerk since March 27, 1934, and as a Government clerk I took an obligation or oath to "uphold, etc.," all Government laws and that, as I believe, would be a breach of trust if a Government employe should attempt or even hold an idea of "striking."

I also believe many stand with right hand up and take such an oath or obligation without even understanding the true meaning.

There are certain organizations which have a binding obligation taken at the time of initiation; there are some words which, if the individual was asked the meaning, he could not explain, and yet he is a member of the organization—How can a Government employe "strike?"

Locking Facilities In Panama

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There is no indication that Congress will act during the present session upon an authorizing bill for extension of locking facilities at Panama. Every citizen interested in National defense will deplore the failure to pass enabling legislation at this session. Regardless of whether an accurate estimate of eventual cost has been made, or, whether definite locations have been established for each of the new lock installations, the passage of an authorizing act now, with an accompanying appropriation bill of say $15,000,000 or $20,000,000, would enable the Governor of the canal to augment his present staff and get under way the studies essential to preparation of the myriad preliminary details necessary to the beginning of any construction.

Excepting the dredges and repair shops, most of the equipment used during original construction has been disposed of or is obsolete. No living quarters are available for a greatly augmented canal personnel. Systematic and economical conduct of such a project require that these preparations be made long in advance.

National defense appropriations approved this year for Army and Navy exceed $1,000,000,000. Recent events have proven that the mobility and general efficacy of the fleet depend entirely upon maintenance of the unimpaired integrity of canal facilities.

Assuming that an authorizing act were passed by this session and that suitable sites were already decided upon, there could be no effective construction under way short of two years. This means that the new locks would not be available to the fleet before 1949 at the earliest. Government consideration already given this project is an admission that our military strategists consider existing facilities neither impregnable nor invulnerable. They remember the long passage of the Oregon in 1898. Why delay?

No Federal project in all the welter of discussion engaged in by the present session of Congress could do more to strengthen our naval arm, stimulate the heavy goods industries, provide constructive worthwhile employment and to reassure a bewildered people, than the passage of this authorizing act and subsequent forceful prosecution of the work itself.

Let's forget Nicaragua and do the obviously strategically correct thing.

The Car Washer

WHEN I WENT on the front porch to get the mail, I saw him standing on the curb, staring at the car. I went out on the curb beside him to find out what was wrong. He touched a tattered, greasy hat as I approached.

His clothes, too, were tattered and hung on from his body as though from a hook. His great brown eyes bulged in their sockets as he talked to me, rolling in emphasis of every word he spoke.

"Dat cah sho' need a washin'," he said.

I admitted that it could be cleaner.

"Ah could give him a grand washin' ef yo want me to."

"How much?" I asked warily.

"Oh, Ah reckon 50 cents." His great eyes sought the ground. He seemed genuinely embarrassed.

"Well," I said, "that seems fair enough. Have you got washing materials?"

His big face lighted up. "Yessuh, yessuh." He produced, as if by magic, a pail, a rag and some soap.

I went in the house, and commenced my breakfast. In a few minutes a voice broke through the window. I put down my paper to listen:

"Gonna wash dis heah cah tell she shines up bright;
Gonna wash, wash, wash tell ain't no mo' dirt;
Gonna wash huh tell she plum clean—
Gonna wash de cah, wash de cah, wash de cah."

This he sang in a deep bass. Then, without warning or hestitation, the the voice flew up to a soprano:

"Who gonna wash de cah?" it shrilled.

"Ah gonna wash de cah," replied the bass.

Yeah?" returned the incredulous soprano.

"Ye-ah," answered the bass in the same breath.

So my scrubbing artist was a falsetto!

The singing died and rose again. For more than an hour it rang intermittently through the neighborhood.

In one of the pauses I heard excited voices in the street. I went to the window and saw the Car Washer engaged in conversation with one of the little boys of the neighborhood.

"Is you still got de measles?"

The little boy lifted a shining, healthy face. "Uh, huh," he answered, grinning broadly.

The Car Washer lifted his beefy hand. "Gowan way fum heah," he cried. "I doan want no measles. Now, git away."

The little boy, unperturbed, sat down on the curb. "Have you killed anybody lately?" he asked.

The Car Washer relaxed, smiled. "Well, now, lemme see. Yeah, Ah do recollect killin' a couple of kids long 'bout las' Wednesday. Dey was actin' mean to me, so ah grab mah razuh and whaak! Ah cut dey heads right smack off. Dose heads jus' roll down de guttah to de sewah, and roll in plop, plop, plop!"

I forsook the window and returned to the living room. From time to time I would be reminded of the Car Washer by the song, which he had taken up again. "Jimme had a nickul. Didn't have it long," rang out the high soprano. And so the morning went.

About 11:30 I went out to the postoffice. When I returned I saw him in earnest conversation with a little mongrel dog that had stopped to pass the time of day with him.

"Come ovah heah, lil' dawg," he said. The little dog wagged his tail. "Come ovah heah an' lemme bash you one." He raised his arm, then laughed a deep, rich laugh as the little dog ran away, tail between his legs.

"Well," I said, approaching him, "have you finished the car?"

"Yessuh. Doan she shine purty?" I acknowledged that it did and handed him two quarters and a dime. He grinned, bowed, tipped his hat, and thrust the money in his pocket. "Thank you, suh, thank you."

I nodded good-by to him. More bowing and scraping. Then he shuffled down the street. "Ah'll be back nex' week" he shouted back.

As I opened the door, I heard his weird song echoing up the street.

"Gonna buy me a nice cream cone
Gonna buy me some candy
Gonna buy me some chew'n' gum
Gonna have me a great big time tonight . . ."

Presently, though, it faded and died away.

Royal Dignity

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Three cheers for Miss Elaine Eliot in her defense of the American people in The Post of July 7. The Honorable Mr. Guffey either made a slip or displayed his ignorance if he said as quoted: "Who but a Roosevelt could meet the dignity of a king and queen."

At least half the writer's ancestors were Britons of some eight or more generations back, and, in common with Miss Eliot and thousands of others, he has the highest respect and admiration for our royal guests and their family. He has never been outside the "States," but, in even his limited acquaintance he has known some persons with dignity, a few with culture, and even several families who could serve hot dogs with both dignity and distinction. Among his acquaintances are descendants of the Tudors, Plantagenets and Campbells of Argyle, as well as of that Walter, son of Alan, who became Stewart (Steward), of the royal household, under David I, of Scotland, and was one of Her Majesty's ancestors.

Comment

Amid all the lovely ceremonies attendant upon the visit of the King and Queen of England to Washington was one sour discordant note to wit: the failure of the party to stop at the Cathedral where Bishop Freeman with thousands of visitors awaited them! One hears comments on all sides.—R. B. G., Washington.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Recalls Crusader

THE RECENT cesspool-sounding and brink-skirting adventures of Luren Dickinson, Governor of Michigan, had for me a strangely reminiscent sound when he related them back home. And a few days later the years fell away and I remembered all on seeing a newspaper photograph of the Governor kneeling in prayer beside a clergyman named Norris, once known as the Texas Tornado, a crusader against liquor, lust and the Catholic Church, which he has held to be roughly complementary.

Gov. Dickinson, on his visit to New York, may have seen innocent maids peering at him with laughing eyes over the rims of cocktail glasses, and he may have mistaken derision for seductive abandon in the glance of those damsels. That could be so.

But on the Reverend Texas Tornado I go back to a night about 1920 when he played a short engagement in the church of the late Rev. John Roach Stratton, across the street and a little bit up the block from the love-bower in which Dottie King was foully but glamorously murdered.

Dr. Stratton was away on tour, reaping acclaim for a recent expose of "conditions" on or about Broadway, arranged and written by a correspondent of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, a journalistic coup which in the language of the movies, could have been called a sock.

Disguised as a butter-and-egg man, Dr. Stratton had gone out fence walking by night under the guidance of the NEA man, who then prepared his copy for release simultaneously with the first of the good doctor's sermons on the iniquity of our incorrigible town.

Their timing and co-operation were perfect, and such fame as Dr. Stratton enjoyed in this world dated from his prowling with the journalist whose only motive was to deliver something which would compel newspaper clients around the country to give his syndicate a break in the highly competitive package-goods trade.

Texas Tornado Then An Unknown

THE TEXAS Tornado, however, was widely unknown, and so was the syndicate for which I worked, and without considering that the fourth inspection district had cleaned up following the Stratton storm, my syndicate made a deal with the Reverend Big Wind to retrace Dr. Stratton's steps and repeat the performance in collaboration with us. The Tornado eagerly agreed, so on a memorable night I set out with, I believe, $40 of expense money, to raise pluperfect hell, accompanied by a tall, angry looking man in a gambler's suit and cowboy hat.

We dined at the Astor grill but were unable to buy a drink, and went from there to a show called "Ladies Night," produced by Al Woods, in which several actresses played a strip-poker scene, peeling down to garments which in these days would be regarded as Mother Hubbards. At that point I made a terrible mistake, for the Tornado began to gobble, and suddenly rose from his seat with the obvious intention of creating a public disturbance, which would have been a spectacular story for me and a beautiful publicity break for Mr. Woods. I don't know yet why I did it, but I yanked him down by the coattails and whispered that he would tip our hand and queer us for the rest of the night in places that were really evil.

SO THAT opportunity passed, and after the show we went to a place called the Little Club, an early speak-easy run by a man named Val, who took one look at the Reverend Tornado and said positively no, they did not serve no intoxicating beverages of any sort, manner or description. This was a terrible blow.

The Tornado had in his pocket a number of small bottles in which he intended to pour the drinks which would be served us that night, but there was no point in collecting samples of grape juice or ginger ale. At Gallagher's they wouldn't even let us in, and I resolutely refused to take him to the only speak-easy that I had personal entree to, a musty dump in a side street, half-basement, known as the Little Home.

The fact was that I was no pub-crawler myself, having no dough for such sports, and knew few places in which I could have bought a drink without proper identification even on my own.

After midnight, therefore, we strolled among the vaudeville boarding houses, and I would point to one darkened door and whisper that that was a notorious hop-joint, and to another and tell him that was a fashionable house of—you know, ill-fame—and boy, what tales those walls could tell.

I give you my word that we didn't get a drink or a tumble from a girl all night, but the Reverend Texas Tornado, like Gov. Dickinson, saw terrible evils in his mind and preached about them later.

I forgot what I wrote under his name as a spook, but not his parting words at the orange-drink stand about 2 a. m., when I asked him if he had any constructive ideas for his copy. The man of God said no, that I could suit myself, "just so you give them some good headlines."

Bridges Quiz Told Reds Expected to Win With Bullets

San Francisco, July 24 (AP).—Communists were told by Paul Cline, of Los Angeles, that "the revolution will be fought with bullets, not ballots," Policeman Oerriel R. Bacon, of Portland, Oreg., testified at Harry Bridges' deportation hearing today.

The patrolman testified he joined the Communist Party in 1930 under instructions of Leo V. Jenkins, then Portland police chief, to look for violation of the Oregon criminal syndicalism law.

D'Alesandro on D. C. Committee

Replaces Rep. Byron Who Is Named to Military Affairs Unit

Tommy D'Alesandro, wise-cracking Baltimore Representative, yesterday realized a year-old ambition when the House Ways and Means Committee voted to recommend his appointment to the House District Committee.

D'Alesandro

D'Alesandro succeeds Representative Byron (Democrat), of Maryland, who resigned simultaneously to accept an appointment on the Military Affairs Committee.

"I feel like I've just won an election," D'Alesandro remarked. "I've worked so hard to get this appointment."

Byron Also Elected

Equally pleased was Byron, former Army aviator and son of the late Col. Joseph C. Byron.

"On the military committee I'll be working with matters I am interested in," the youthful legislator said, "and at least I'll know more about it than I did about milk—which was about all we did on the District Committee."

BYRON

D'Alesandro wasted no time in formulating a program for Washington and the House District Committee.

Responding to questions of newspapermen, he urged:

A subway to alleviate traffic congestion and speed Government employes to and from their suburban homes.

A super-speed highway connecting Baltimore and Washington.

Votes for Washingtonians and representation in Congress.

Byron, upon leaving the committee, said his brief experience had convinced him the District government needs a thorough reorganization, especially in its relation to Congress.

Holds Committee Is Inadequate

"This city has outgrown the present setup," he said. "The House District Committee worked all right when the Capital was just a small town, but it's inadequate now."

Byron, whose district is adjacent to the Capital, recently suggested abolishing the District Committee after the fiasco that followed the local milk inquiry and asphalt paving deal expose.

A delegation of civic leaders called yesterday on Representative Collins (Democrat), of Mississippi, retiring chairman of the sub-committee on District appropriations. L. A. Carruthers, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, urged Collins to reconsider, but Collins said his resignation will stand.

Selection of Representative Casey (Democrat), of Massachusetts, as successor to Collins was urged in a statement issued by the District Communist Party.

"The citizens of Washington are entitled, at long last, to have a person on the sub-committee with warm sympathies for human needs and not one who bows to the golden calf of economy," the statement declares.

of licensed roadside restaurants to sell beer for consumption in automobiles. The practice, heretofore allowed, only recently was prohibited.

"This legislation is highly dangerous," Shafer warned. "It was introduced for the special interest of the hot shops and is not conducive to public safety on the highways.

He charged that beer is sold to minors in automobiles.

Defenders of the bill, Nichols and Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, argued that it was no more dangerous to permit a person to drink beer in a car than to park the car and imbibe at a table.

"If a man drinks at a table, the manager can see if he is able to walk from the table to the car and thus demonstrate his ability to drive," retorted Representative Micheneer (Republican), of Michigan.

"If we had passed my 12-cent milk bill," interrupted Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, facetiously, "there would be no necessity for this legislation."

Eberharter's objection to the Senate bill emanding the motorists' financial responsibility act, he said, was that many motorists might be deprived of the right to drive "because some magistrate finds him guilty of reckless driving."

Life's Darkest Moment

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

Mexican Journey

The narrow-gauge train bound for Oaxaca, says R. H. K. Marett in his "An Eye Witness of Mexico" (Oxford, $3), "plunged into a great ravine, dropping in less than an hour from some 7,000-odd feet almost to sea level. This canyon was like a Mexican version of Hell—hot and utterly barren, the only relieving feature being spiky cactus plants, some round like wheels, others long and thin like the pipes of an organ. . . . The heat was . . . unbearable."

We read Mr. Marett's pleasant book on the Oaxaca train, and reread parts of it precisely in that Mexican version of Hell. For there had been what Mr. Marett, who is English, would call "a spot of rain" in the Puebla Highlands, and the Rio Salado (which in the course of the geological millions of years cut that great ravine) had gone on a tear, determined to carve new contours in the valley. One of its objectives had been the railroad embankment, and the night train had slipped off the undermined track. We passed nine of the hottest hours of our lives waiting for a crew of Indian railroad workers to rebuild the embankment, lay new tracks (cutting the rails by man power with a cold chisel) and lifting the Nocturno back onto the new trackage. We had plenty of time to read, and only Mr. Marett's book and the timetable to study.

It was a relaxing experience. Nobody was in a hurry. The second-class car boasted a guitar; it sang. The first-class coach devoted itself to eating. When it had exhausted its own provisions, it investigated the village of Ignacio Garcia, where we passed the four hottest hours of the day. Ignacio Garcia boasted a co-operative sugar mill, idle and rusty; a trades-union office, and one store. The store had in stock four tiny cans of French sardines and some evil-smelling dried fish. The villagers produced a few alligator pears, some minute mangoes and a few bunches of small bananas, for some reason known as "domenicos," or Sunday bananas. Under the thatched roofs of their huts the village women placidly continued ironing white pajamas, which are the eternal garb of most of Mexico. In the brightest sun-scorched dust of the square the gamins continued playing an intricate Mexican game of marbles. What was a train off the tracks to a Mexican? What was time?

TOWARD 4 O'CLOCK, with enormous difficulty, the passengers were rounded up and the train ambled ten miles forward to Los Cues, where we should have passed the up train at 12:25. Los Cues is nothing but a siding in the desert; but the long, thin cactus plants which Mr. Marett saw through his train windows were more than a sight to the second-class passengers. Their spiny tips were loaded with tunas—food to the Indian. A half hour was spent in futile efforts to dislodge the tunas by tossing stones at them; more time was devoted to an elaborate effort to build a human pyramid high enough to reach them with due gingerliness. One group engaged in an exciting lizard hunt; another built a fire to roast the products of the others' efforts. The first-class car engaged in a heated discussion of the advisability of walking the mile and a half of track which separated us from the scene of the derailment. One party had just determined upon this vast expenditure of energy when news arrived that the train was to move up. The night train had run out of beer and our train had received orders to advance to its relief.

So we saw the sons of revolutionary Mexico build the last section of missing track. Most of the laborers looked as if they had never seen a railroad train before; and they enjoyed the opportunity to study it. Everything seemed to be done in the most painful manner possible. The derailed cars were actually hoisted back into place by human muscle, aided by a few small ties as levers. We were Connecticut Yankees in King Cortez's country. This narrow-gauge train was puffing through the Middle Ages.

As Mr. Marett says, though the Mexican Indian seems to excite all visiting foreigners to a vast yearning to do something about him, he remains for the most part contentedly as he has been for 400 years. The tourists gush over him; the artists paint him; the anthropologists study him; the politicians rant about him; the wicked capitalists exploit him to the best of their limited ability. The Indian defies them all. His articulate leaders defy the foreigner in words, but the rank and file of Indians have a weapon more powerful than words. It is their wantlessness. When they have earned what they need for supper, they go home. Time and a half, even double pay, for overtime, does not interest them.

Yet they live in the twentieth century. Their capital is a modern city, with handsomer streets of more comfortable homes than New York City can boast. Somehow this hand labor built the great highway which winds so smoothly up and down the endless ranges of mountains which separate the gringo border from the City of Mexico—and when you have aired a few generalizations about Indian Mexico, you suddenly wake up to realize that nine-tenths of the cars which roll along that smooth road carry Mexican licenses and have dark-skinned drivers. And most of the Yankees, who drive to Taxco, mechanical geniuses though they think themselves, hire Mexicans to drive their cars for them over that alarming road. All along the roads, dotted with crumbling Spanish churches, stand tidy little Indian schoolhouses, most of them named after heroes of Mexico's twentieth-century revolution.

MR. MARETT is a Tory Englishman, but he lived in Mexico for eight years, first as an employe of an English railroad company, then as an official of an English oil company, both of which were in due time expropriated by the Mexicans. And he married a Mexican, and though he is positive that his wife is of pure Spanish descent, uncontaminated by Indian blood, this gave him a certain perspective. He understands how a Mexican might resent English company officials who live for 20 years in their country, never learning more than a few words of its language and refusing to have social relations with dark-skinned Mexicans. In fact, Mr. Marett considers the Mexican Revolution, a continuous if erratic affair six years older than the Russian Revolution, "a process as natural as the outflow of a running river," and he thinks that Mexico's seizure of the Mexican oil wells may appear to future historians as "the first triumphant act of piracy of her (Mexico's) Elizabethan era."

Englishmen rarely attain to such cool detachment.

A tourist cannot expect to see far beneath the surfaces of a country. But even a tourist may begin to suspect that this Indian Renaissance—and perhaps the Mexican Revolution can be better understood in such terms than when complicated by Marxian phraseology—may be historically of as much significance to the world as the Nazi excrescence in Europe.

Labor Board Criticized

By Mark Sullivan

Delay Maneuvers

DECISION OF the House to investigate the Labor Board is an act of criticism, directed toward the board, and also toward C. I. O. and all who defend the board and its practices. The decision expresses impatience of the House against a long series of maneuvers, by the board and partisans to it—maneuvers which the House interpreted as designed to save the board, and to prevent amendment of the labor act under which the board operates. The coming investigation is the answer of the House to what much of the House has regarded as "stalling" by the board and its friends.

When Congress met last January, everybody understood that amendment of the labor act would be among the principal business of the session. The normal procedure would be for the Labor Committee of House and Senate to hold hearings, and then make recommendations, upon which Congress would act.

At once began maneuvers of delay. Fundamental in the situation was the fact that one labor organization, A. F. of L., demanded amendment, while its rival, C. I. O., wished no change in the board or the act. Early in the year President Roosevelt caused the officials of the two organizations to hold joint meetings, with a view to making peace, and uniting. Then it was said that so long as the attempt at peace was under way, the Labor Committee of Congress ought to defer hearings—for testimony at hearings would tend to deepen the bitterness between the rivals. Also, if the two got together, there would be no section of labor asking for change in the Labor Board or amendment of the labor act.

Hearings Arranged, Then Postponed

To the wish for delay, the labor committees of Congress accommodated themselves. Again and again, in February and March, dates for hearings by the Senate Labor Committee were set, and postponed.

Finally it became apparent that Mr. Rosevelt's attempt to get the rival labor organizations together would fail. In April and May two labor committees of Congress began hearings. By that time it was probably too late to get amendment of the labor act at this session of Congress, for the hearings would take weeks—actually they continued until a week ago, until the House, tired of the delay, took the situation into its own hands.

While the labor committees of both branches of Congress were holding hearings, the board and its partisans used the time to make other maneuvers designed to forestall amendment of the act. One member of the board, who had been especially criticized by A. F. of L. and others, had come to the end of his term. Apparently Mr. Roosevelt wished and intended to reappoint him. But after several months he was thrown to the wolves. In his place was appointed a man who was less partisan, but who nevertheless shared the wish to save the labor act from amendment.

The board tried appeasement, by changing some of its practices. When the act was originally passed, its author, Senator Wagner, had said the act meant the board should receive petitions from employers. But the board had declined to receive petitions from employers. In June, however, the board said it would reverse its policy, and would now receive petitions from employers. By that, the board anticipated, and presumably hoped to forestall, one of the proposed amendments of the act.

Appeasement Plan Irritated Congress

THAT ATTEMPT at appeasement boomeranged. Instead of appeasing Congress it irritated Congress. Here was a board first withholding, and then granting, rights which ought not to be dependent on the will of any board.

Here was a board created by Congress, truculently resisting amendment by Congress of the law by which the board was set up. And, in order to forestall amendment by Congress, the board in effect amended the act itself. To Congress that seemed like the board usurping the function of Congress. That action by the Labor Board became an indictment not only of the board but of the whole New Deal tendency to exercise more power than Congress meant to grant.

Finally the House reached the end of patience. By a nearly two-thirds vote it took a step that is almost without precedent. It took the whole matter of the Labor Board and the labor act out of the hands of the House Labor Committee. It set up a new and separate special committee to investigate the board. "Investigate" is a more drastic process than "hold hearings." An investigating committee can require the attendance of witnesses who would prefer not to be heard.

The investigation will be thorough. Without much doubt, it will bring out further reasons for changing the labor act, additional to the reasons already shown. And without doubt the session of Congress next January, made up of the same membership as the present session, will overhaul the labor act, and the practices of the Labor Board, thoroughly.

age insurance so as virtually to double the number of persons 65 and over who could qualify for old age insurance benefits when payments begin January 1, 1940.

The Senate's deletion of the House McCormick amendment to permit States maintaining adequate unemployment insurance reserve to reduce employer contributions to the unemployment compensation fund.

Under a secrecy agreement, neither House nor Senate conferees would discuss the controversy with reporters, but word spread through the Senate and House that no progress toward a settlement was made at yesterday's conference, and no time for another meeting had been set. Efforts to agree on the three chief points of controversy had similarly failed at several previous conferences, it was said.

Agreed on Other Points

The Connally amendment, keystone of the impasse, abandons the present 50-50 matching basis on the first $15 of needy grants but requires matching on all over that amount up to the present $40 pension maximum.

Thus if a State wished to pay the full $40 old-age needy pension, it would put up $5 and the Government $10 toward the first $15, and the remaining $25 would be split, $12.50 each way. No minimum pension is set and any initial amount of $5 or less the State supplied would be met by double that sum from the Government.

House and Senate conferees were in agreement on other highlight provisions of the bill, including the "freezing" of old-age insurance taxes at 1 per cent on employers and 1 per cent on workers for three yers, old-age insurance liberalizations and supplemental benefits for aged wives, and for widows, children and aged dependent parents.

Pan American—Plus!

By Phyllis Crystal

Germany And The Child Congress

Special Correspondence of The Post.

San Jose, Costa Rica.

A CONTROVERSY which threatens to reverberate throughout all the republics of the Pan American Union has broken out in this ordinarily peaceful little Central American country as a result of press reports that officials of the ministry of health have invited Germany to send representatives of scientific institutions and displays of exhibit material to the eighth Pan American Child Congress which is to meet here October 12 to 19 of this year.

Usually regarded as perhaps the least controversial of all the technical conferences and congresses held under the auspices of the Pan American Union, the child congresses, meeting at intervals of from three to five years have, in the past, drawn their representatives from the ranks of the medical, legal, social welfare and educational professions in the American nations, and have never been open to representatives, official or unofficial, of other countries.

Plans for the forthcoming congress had been under way for more than a year under the direction of Dr. A. Pena Chavarria, minister of health, and Dr. Carlos Saenz Herrera, general secretary of the congress. In the spring a sudden change in the personnel of the ministry of health resulted in the appointment of Dr. Alfonso Acosta Guzman as minister of health and that of Dr. Mario Lujan as general secretary of the congress.

WHEN DR. LUJAN announced that plans were under way for an International Exposition of Social Hygiene, Maternal and Infant Protection, Education and Child Care, to be held concurrently with the congress, there was a general feeling of satisfaction. It has been customary for participating countries to send exhibits of maternal and child-health and welfare work in their respective localities. But in the past only participating countries, that is to say members of the Pan American Union, have been represented, and it was taken for granted that this would be the case in Costa Rica. Imagine the surprise, not to say consternation of many elements of the population, therefore, when one of the leading daily papers, La Tribuna, announced that it had been informed by the secretary general of the congress that Germany had chartered a ship for the exhibit it was sending to the congress and that among the passengers would be members of the delegation which Germany is sending to the congress."

Hardly was the first issue off the presses when the afternoon paper, La Prensa Libre, sounded a call to arms to the press of all Pan America. "The congress is Pan American. It is not a Pan American-German congress," it said.

It was announced that powerful personalities in Costa Rica were launching a campaign to prevent German delegates from attending the congress and to bar German products from the exposition, while at the same time a telegraphic appeal was being made to other Latin-American nations, especially to the press, urging them to protest against non-American participation.

La Prensa Libre carried its plea to the minister of foreign affairs, who was quoted as stating that only governments of the countries members of the Pan American Union had been invited to send official delegations.

THE IDEA of inviting non-American participation appears to have originated with the ministry of health. Dr. Alfonso Acosta Guzman, who now holds the health portfolio, was educated in Germany, has been decorated by the German government and has great admiration for German scientific achievements. His predecessor, Dr. A. Pena Chevarria, received his medical training in Colombia and in the United States and had developed a public health program and antivenereal disease campaign which won high praise from Surgeon General Thomas Parran when he stopped here last year on his return from the Pan American Sanitary Conference in Bogota.

As though German representation in the exposition were not enough, the secretary general of the congress was quoted by La Prensa Libre as indicating that other European nations had accepted invitations to send exhibits as well and that participation by non-American nations will not necessarily be confined to the exposition.

"Non-Pan American elements can assist at the congress as official members, but their decisions, resolutions and rules of procedure must be approved by the vote of the official delegates," he is reported to have explained, in an endeavor to calm fears by showing that the congress would "be under the strict control of the official delegates who represent Pan American countries attending the congress."

THE REGULATIONS governing the congress, published some time ago in the local press, and copies of which are understood to have been transmitted to all the Pan American countries, provide for four classes of membership: Honorary delegates "appointed at a meeting of the delegates of the countries represented at the congress;" official delegates, that is, those "appointed by the governments of the countries represented in the congress;" official members, including members of the organizing committee . . . the delegations of foreign child-welfare institutions, and the persons mentioned in Articles 5, 21 and 23 (these persons are members of certain committees, including the committees for the international exposition); and regular members, defined as "any person with an official diploma as a professor or teacher, and to members of other professions" . . . Regular members, according to a further explanation in the official regulations, "will be all those, whether from Costa Rica or from other countries, who are concerned with child-welfare problems in either a scientific or a practical way."

The regulations provide that all members of the congress may be present at any of the sessions. They may present reports on the subjects included in the program, and they may take part in the discussion of the papers presented.

Presence of German or other European representatives of scientific agencies or children's agencies in Costa Rica would, therefore, for the first time in the history of any official Pan American assembly, open the floor to discussions and reports by representatives of non-American countries.

The nearest approach to a controversy at a Pan American Child Congress was reported after the seventh congress held in 1935 in Mexico City, when a Peruvian delegate, in an unscheduled address at a plenary session, urged the delegates to consider the question of opposition to Japanese immigration as a eugenics measure. The motion was widely quoted in the press, brought a protest from the Japanese Embassy, and was tabled at the final executive session.

SINCE La Tribuna published its first story, Dr. Mario Lujan has denied that Germany has chartered a special ship for its exhibit and delegation. The material, he explains, is coming on a ship which makes regularly scheduled stop at ports on the Costa Rican coast.

There is a large German colony in Costa Rica and many representatives of German business firms are to be found in San Jose. The barter system has been in effect between the two countries, coffee being exchanged for drugs, chemicals, agricultural equipment and other products.

By sending an impressive display of medical and other scientific products to the Exposition of Social Hygiene, Maternal and Infant Protection, Education and Child Care, and by having representatives of scientific institutions participating in the congress as "official members," Germany would be killing two birds with one stone: she would be displaying her wares with a view to trade expansion, and would be shattering a precedent by participating in the discussions of a Pan American body.

Just who is responsible for this situation it is impossible to say. It has been suggested that some of the German residents in Costa Rica may have urged the minister of public health to open the congress to other nations. On the other hand, some of the local physicians, all of whom were educated in other countries, since Costa Rica has neither a university nor a school of medicine, may have felt that the child congress would furnish an opportunity to bring to Costa Rica valuable exhibits of scientific advances from other parts of the world.

But to many persons not only in Costa Rica but in other countries of the Pan American Union, it would appear that Germany has chosen the occasion of the eighth Pan American Child Congress to drive an entering wedge into the whole structure of Pan American solidarity.

Cans of American Films To Compete at Cannes

International Film Festival Is Being Planned; Washington Players Busy on 'Twelfth Night;' This, That and the Other About the Theater

ACCORDING TO OFFICIAL REPORT from Paris, plans are rapidly steaming ahead for France's International Film Festival, to be held at Cannes in September. This, roughly, is the equivalent of America's Academy Awards, expanded to embrace the entire world.

BELL

A Cannes Festival first prize will be awarded for the best film entered by each competing country. The winning films will be designated "First Prize of the 1939 Cannes Festival for the United States"—or England or France or whatever the country happens to be. The Louis Numiere First International Prize will be bestowed upon the best director of all countries. Other awards will be made for the best acting of both genders, authorship, musical arrangements, etc., etc., much as in Hollywood.

Half of the motion pictures competing at Cannes must have their original European showing on that occasion. In order to be accepted, they must have been produced within the last 12 months. Each competing nation will have the privilege of nominating one member of the board of judges, who is not associated with the film industry. The voting, as usual, will be secret. The number of films each country may enter depends upon its annual volume of production—which should give the United States a slight edge!

Cannes seems a long distance away, but a first prize from the festival is indicative of superiority under keener conditions of competition than is reflected by Hollywood's annual appraisal of our own strictly domestic product. How many would you say the United States will cop?

If you require a hint as to the proportionate consumption of American films on the other side, Ireland might be taken as a convenient example—since I happen to have the figures before me. Of the 1,506 motion pictures imported into Eire last year, American films accounted for 82 per cent, British pictures 17 per cent, with the remaining 1 per cent divided among German, French and Irish productions.

The Washington Players, one learns, are engaged in intensive rehearsals of their forthcoming production of Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," with Carlton Ayers as director and Bess Davis Schreiner as production manager. "Twelfth Night" will be played in tabloid, festival fashion, without intermission. The comedy is scheduled for the National Sylvan Theater on Tuesday night, August 1.

The Washington Players, enlisting many of Washington's foremost resident actors, have presented many of the Sylvan Theater's most substantial successes during the past six years. Conspicuous among them may be mentioned "Alice in Wonderland" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream," several seasons ago, and "As You Like It," last year. It is the ambition of the group to make "Twelfth Night" the best of them all.

The drama desks are being bidden to another breaking of bread by Eastern Division Manager Carter Barron, of Loew's, Inc. This time it is for tomorrow night at 7 in the Willard Hotel to meet the members of the cast of "Irene," the musical comedy to be presented on the stage at Loew's Capitol Theater, beginning Friday. Conversation and lemonade will start flowing in the quarters of the Variety Club at 6:30.

Anton Hardt, former director of the Roadside Theater, now associated with the Ford Exposition at the New York World's Fair, turned guide last week. He had in tow at Mr. Whalen's sprawling spectacle Edward Everett Horton, noted screen and stage star, now touring the "straw hat" circuit in "Spring-time for Henry;" Day Tuttle, former director of the Washington Civic Theater, now serving in the same capacity at the Mount Kisco summer theater; Richard Skinner, manager of the Westchester Playhouse and also formerly associated with the Civic Theater here, Mrs. Tuttle and members of Mr. Horton's cast. They all agreed that Mr. Whalen is putting on a good show, too.

You have heard them for weeks over the radio, but you will hear them again when Twentieth Century-Fox's "Second Fiddle" comes to town. I mean the six songs Irving Berlin has written for the picture opening Friday at the Capitol. They are "Back to Back," "I'm Sorry for Myself," "An Old-Fashioned Tune Is Always New," "Song of the Metronome," "When Winter Comes" and "I Poured My Heart Into a Song" and every one of them is a honey—unless you are tired of them by now.

Washington isn't the only city into which screen stars drop from the skies after quick dashes from the West Coast. Sally Eilers made it from Hollywood to the Mohawk Drama Festival, at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 15 hours to play the lead in George Ade's "The College Widow" for Director Charles Coburn, beginning tonight. Odd how tireless these old Ade comedies are. Three years ago the Mohawk group put on his "The County Chairman" and discovered, much to their surprise, that it hadn't aged a day since Macklyn Arbuckle played it 'way back when.

Following her success in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," Greer Garson will be costarred with Robert Taylor in M-G-M's "Remember," according to report. This will be her first American-made film. Miss Garson must have a nice change of pace to follow Robert Donat with Robert Taylor.

ONE OF BEN Bernie's relatives recently arrived here from Europe, but was detained at Ellis Island because of some legal technicalities . . . Bernie told this to a friend, who arranged for former Gov. Dave Scholtz, of Florida to intercede . . . The immigrant was admitted, Scholtz sent a bill for $2,500 for legal services rendered—and when Bernie paid no attention to this a judgment was entered against the band leader. Ben paid no heed to the judgment until he played an engagement some weeks later in North Carolina— where, pursuant to the law there, he was arrested for nonpayment of this judgment . . . Bernie now is at the Astor Roof. Thursday night he inaugurated a series of Celebrity Nights. One of the celebrities present was Gov. Scholtz, who was greeted by Bernie—and then, at the ringside, effected a $152 settlement.

He wrote to the officials, reminded them of the mistake—and so, at the Art Exhibit now the sculpturing has been corrected, to rightside up.

A NEW ELECTRIC SIGN on Broadway, atop the Mayfair Theater Building, soon will announce "John Henry Is Coming." It's an ad announceing the production of Roark Bradford's play, "John Henry," which will star Paul Robeson. This is a Broadway record for advance ads, because the show won't be produced for five months . . . Jim Kienan, Mayor LaGuardia's secretary, will broadcast with his brother John on the "Information Please" program August 1 . . . Gene Tunney will appear before the Kleig lights as one of the experts when the second "Information Please" movie short is screened.

OLSEN & Johnson will branch out into the night club business. The Midnight Sun, the cafe located in the same building where their "Hellzapoppin" now is housed, will be converted into a new club called "Hellzapopp—Inn" . . . Grover Whalen still is trying to dissuade Charles Washburn, the publicist, from referring to the World's Fair grounds as "The Park" . . . Vincent Richards, who was a member of America's Davis Cup team for so many years, stated that his 9-year-old son, who is left-handed, shows such promise as a tennis player that "I guarantee that five years from now he'll be the amateur champion."

JOSEPHINE Huston received this letter: "Through a series of amusing circumstances, I have become acquainted with you. A letter of yours has reached me. It confesses to a rather tense, emotional experience—raw in spots. Your language is frequently picturesque. When you speak of 'Bulls-glands being popped' the phrasing is vigorous in its half-hypnotic submission. Then, naming Elyot, your language has a rich, impassioned appeal. Your pathetic satire, however, I won't quickly forget." . . . Miss Huston was puzzled by this, and the references to Elyot and bulls-glands—until she remembered that she had written, on her private stationery, and lost the lines she was studying—the second act of Noel Coward's "Private Lives."

HARRY DUPREE is the band leader and pianist of the orchestra which is featured at the famous Chicken Farm at the World's Fair. The bass fiddle player in his orchestra is his father . . . Jack Colt, son of Ethel Barrymore, toured the night clubs protesting that he is NOT one of the five Barrymores now in summer stock . . . Fred Allen invited Tom Harrington, of the Young & Rubicam agency, to vacation with him. Harrington begged off because of work waiting to be completed. "Come on," Allen urged. "What are you trying to become—a four-ulcer man?" . . . The Norman Bel Geddes deal to decorate El Morocco has hit a snag. The designer, who built the $6,000,000 Futurama, has pared his cafe estimate to a paltry $100,000.

FOUR WIVES—all married to radio stars—have been playing poker at weekly sessions for the past year . . . Last week one of them confided to the second about the third player, "I've suspected that she's been cheating. But yesterday I finally found the proof" . . . "Yesterday?" replied the second. "I've known that for three months." . . . "Then why didn't you say something?" she was asked . . . "Because," she explained, "I didn't want to break up our game."

A 'Dead-Ender' Goes Berserk

LEO GORCEY,
one of the original "Dead End" kids, who seems a little more vicious than usual in this scene from "Hell's Kitchen," the Warner Brothers production soon to be seen on the screen at the Metropolitan Theater. Margaret Lindsay and Ronald Reagan head the less violent segments of the cast

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

New York, July 24.—Vivien Leigh won New York hands down. No airs or graces for that one. Just so happy to be back with Laurence Oliver, and who can blame her? Even the sty in her eye didn't prevent her keeping her appointment with the press. When you predict that she'll be the sensation of 1940 you're merely stating a fact. Mind, I was dead set against an English girl playing Scarlett, but she's done such a superb job I've got to admit I was wrong and they were right. In fact, she didn't play Scarlett, she is Scarlett.

HOPPER

Any why Warners doesn't send on Oomphie Ann Sheridan for a New York holiday, I'll never know. The boys here are pining to meet her face to face. One editor even offered to make the trip to Hollywood and escort her back personally. They think she has the same quality Jean Harlow had. They were crazy about Jean. They don't want to be told any more about her; want to find out for themselves.

Lunched at Colony with Johnnie Considene just after he'd got permission from the Edison family to do the story of Thomas A. Edison's life. He was amused at the request of Edison's widow, that there be no swearing in the picture. Guess she'd never heard of Will Hays. I asked Johnnie about sequel to "Boys Town." Nothing's happened so far. Seems Father Flanagan is asking $200,000."

Russell Davenport, of Fortune magazine gave his wife a 5-month-old lion cub for her birthday—Hollywood touch! Wonder if he got that way when we went to Thatcher School in Ojai Valley?

One of Inez' happiest memories when she clipper-shipped to Europe was, as she was relaxing, a steward tapped at her cabin and said: "The Captain's compliments, miss. Would you like to see Venus rising?" She would and did on the bridge. Venus was like a huge airplane beacon light rising from the sea and the twirling outer edges seemed crimson.

Ryerson-Clements Co. Turns Out Scripts By the Bale

By Frederick C. Othman
United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Canoga Park, Calif., July 24.—One-half of a fiction factory waved her hand at the rural luxury with which she was surrounded today and said: "I suppose there is no other business wherein you set up shop with nothing but a pencil and a pad of yellow paper and emerge with things like this."

Florence Ryerson wasn't bragging; she simply was marveling at the material results of her scribbling—and that of her husband, Colin Clements, the other half of the factory. Between them they turn but more words profitably perhaps than any other Hollywood writing team.

The list of their current projects is enough to leave you dizzy, particularly if you've ever pounded a typewriter for a living. Miss Ryerson, who is under contract to M-G-M, has finishd the scripts for "The Wizard of Oz" and "The Gentleman From Arizona," and now is in the midst of turning out "Soapy Smith" for Wallace Beery.

Plays Are Snapped Up

She and Clements have collaborated on two plays, "June Mad" may be seen on Broadway this fall, but, if it isn't, one of the studios wants to buy it for $25,000. "Through the Night," first mystery drama they ever have attempted, will have its premiere here August 8.

The firm of Ryerson, Clements & Co. has written five detective novels and is in the midst of turning out a sixth for fall publication. And that's only the beginning.

They are making a collection of their one-act plays, of which they have done more than 100, for still another book this autumn. Otherwise they have nothing to do, except for a few magazine stories and similar profitable trivia.

Miss Ryerson gives Metro a good day's work every day; then she aids on some of their other projects. In the meantime, Clements helps her with her picture writing, and she assists him with his plays—and they're so busy making a big business of literature they hardly have time to enjoy the old stage coach station they turned into one of southren California's most comfortable homes.

A First-Class Industry

The one-act play business is one which gets little publicity, but it's a first-class industry nevertheless. When Clements writes a play, he refuses to sell it. He leases it.

"And I suppose we could live comfortably on the royalties," he said. "Fact is, I understand that 365 nights a year somewhere in the world, at least one of our plays is being produced."

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, July 24 (INS).—Edwin Knopf, story editor of the Sam Goldwyn studio, was so intrigued with "Diane de Poitiers," John Erskine's new book, that he promptly bought it. He had tried, I hear, to interest Goldwyn, but when Sam showed no enthusiasm, he personally obtained the rights with S. G.'s permission. Diane was the mistress of King Henry II of France and she lived during the days of Catherine de Medici, the arch poisoner. Her fight with the de Medici gal is one of the highlights of the story.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Erskine wrote "Helen of Troy" and "Adam and Eve," but Edwin feels this newest book is his greatest biography and will make a wow of a picture. Diane so influenced the king, she exercised unlimited power and was a fascinating figure until her death at 67. Bet you a nickel Sam changes his mind and grabs it.

S. S. Van Dine's detective character played such an important part in William Powell's movie career, many of his friends still call him Philo. Warners cannot get Bill, naturally, to continue with this popular character, so James Stephenson, a very good English actor you will see in "Beau Geste" and "Elizabeth and Essex," will bring back the popular Van Dine sleuth. Margot Stevenson, pronounced the same as James' name, but spelled differently, will play opposite him in "Philo Vance Returns." Just a word about Monsieur Powell. A little bird told me he was only supposed to work three hours at M-G-M, but he became so interested no one could stop him. Personal note. Please, Bill, be a good boy and don't overdo. We all love you and want you to continue to be well and strong.

"Stanley and Livingstone" may write movie history for Spencer Tracy, Darryl Zanuck and everybody else connected with it. It is so good that even before the public gets a chance to put its stamp of approval on it, a sequel "With Henry Stanley in England" is being planned. This semibiography by Georges Drumcurt deals with Stanley's later carrer after he came back from Africa and turned from journalism to politics. He was elected to a seat in Parliament. Of course, the whole thing hinges on getting Spencer Tracy from M-G-M again for the sequel—since it would be very silly to attempt a second picture with any other actor in the Stanley role. But I'm betting on Darryl.

When Judy Garland was in Providence on a personal appearance and told J. Lazrus, a merchant there, that she longed one day to have enough money to help underprivileged children the way Marion Davies has done, she never dreamed her idea would make such an impression on the businessman. For years Judy has been saving her pennies to build an institution similar to the Marion Davies clinic. A year or so ago she bought the lot for the building—but last week she was shocked and deeply touched to learn the Rhode Island merchant had died—and willed her some money to help carry out her plan.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The John Cromwells (Kay Johnson), who recently adopted a boy, will soon welcome a baby of their own; Phyllis Brooks becomes Mrs. Cary Grant in Paris this week, if our latest information is correct and it comes from one of their closest pals; Melchior Lengyel, author of "Ninotchka," Garbo's current movie, reached Hollywood today; Gilbert Miller's luck at Hollywood Park had all his pals asking him for inside information which, of course, he did not have; while Constance Talmadge was Marge Crane's house guest at Lake Geneva, T. Netcher spent the week-end there and he couldn't have been more attentive to the attractive Connie; 'tis whispered T. may wed one Lee Carson.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Diet Helps Those Reducing to Really Enjoy Food Because It Eliminates That Terrifying Specter of Rising Scales

THE AVERAGE fat woman does not really enjoy eating as much as she likes to believe. She is torn between the love of good food and a guilty conscience and every time she sits down to a hearty meal, she is haunted by the specter of rising scales! Now, I wouldn't call that fun!

This idea that overweights do not have as much fun eating as is generally supposed was corroborated recently by someone who wrote, plaintively:

"I haven't had a dessert since Christmas. I'm afraid that if I eat anything I'll gain—I'm always worrying about my weight!"

Can Enjoy Food

Some peace of mind is necessary even for the enjoyment of food. If you don't know which meal your next pound is coming from you would be much better off on a reducing diet. The diet not only removes all fear that you will gain any weight but it carries with it the full guarantee that you can eat and lose.

You can see that the "Summer Slimming Menus" contain plenty of food, not excluding corn-on-the-cob, ice cream, and many other dishes which you may look upon as fattening. Some of you look askance at these dishes and perhaps quietly delete them from the menus. Others write to protest that you could never lose weight on so much food!

But you will.

The whole secret of reducing is to take fewer calories each day than you actually need. And that's the only secret. As long as you take fewer calories than you need, you will lose weight. There are two schools of reducers who never seem to reduce: The ones who give up certain foods and the ones who give up breakfast.

On a reducing diet, it is important that the calories you do take be fairly evenly distributed throughout the day. Breakfast should be a good meal—for it follows your longest period without food.

Can Eat Five Meals!

If you have barely managed to prevent your weight from going higher on two meals a day, you will scoff at the suggestion that you could reduce on five! But some of the most successful weight reductions have been accomplished on this plan. The theory is that by taking food more often, you do not have a chance to work up an appetite and are not nearly so likely to overeat. Three meals or five, however, the day's total calories must be restricted to the number that will let you lose weight. In the "Summer Slimming Menus" the calories allowance has been cut down so that you can lose one-fourth pound per day—and on all that food!

The Gentler Sex

The column, "The Gentler Sex," by Malvina Lindsay, is being discontinued temporarily. It will be resumed Monday

Learn New Tap Steps

HOW YOU wish you could do something interesting—like Janet! Her clever tap dancing is winning her a real career.

But you can tap dance, too! Easy to learn how—once you discover the secret—that all tap dancing is based on about a half-dozen steps you can teach yourself in an evening.

After learning those basic taps, just a matter of combining steps in different ways, working up speed. Soon you shine at parties, entertainments. You may find you have real talent—enough for a professional career.

Simple, isn't it? And just as simple to learn the other steps—and the frills, the hops and jumps that the crowd goes for

In our 40-page booklet, "Self-Instruction in Tap Dancing," a well-known teacher gives diagrams and instructions for basic tap steps, practice routines and full-length exhibition routines—buck, rhythm buck, waltz clog, military buck. A home course to bring you more popularity and fun and—perhaps—more money.

Radio Journalist Submits Recipe for Zestful Salad

By Martha Ellyn
The Post Food Editor.

Favorite recipes of leading home economists of Washington are presented daily in this column.

MARYLAND is famous for its black-eyed susans, fried chicken and delicious sea food recipes. A native daughter of the "Old Line" State is our guest food editor today. Miss Gertrude Chesnut, of Hyattsville, Maryland, graduated from the University of Maryland, where she majored in Institutional Management, College of Home Economics. Miss Chesnut has used her training in the publicity and news-writing field. She is now editor of the Washington Bureau of Transradio Press Service, and has a radio program, "Women Make the News."

Miss Chesnut

Miss Chesnut has contributed a salad recipe for the Post food readers and says, "Since my hobbies are all out-of-door ones, many of my friends (the ones who haven't camped with me on trips) suggest that I give an out-of-door menu. So I went into a huddle with several friends who had picnicked with me. They helpfully suggested that I write a menu of how not to cook an out-of-door meal. Steak seasoned by blowing sand . . . raw centered potatoes . . . and corn, burned on one side and raw on other, were some of the things they remembered. I decided that my outdoor hobbies would remain just flying and horseback riding, while cooking would remain in the home. So my favorite recipe is a zestful salad."

Tyrolean Salad

Select 1 large firm head of lettuce. Wash the lettuce and pull leaves apart in small pieces, then crisp them in refrigerator. Cut 6 slices of bacon in small pieces, and starting in a cold skillet, cook to a golden brown and add ½ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon sugar, ¼ teaspoon black pepper, and ¼ teaspoon cinnamon. Then add ¼ cup cider vinegar and bring to boil. Mince 1 medium silver skinned onion (not too small), slice 2 stalks of celery and cut 1 medium-sized cucumber in quarters lengthwise and slice. Place with the lettuce in a wooden bowl. Pour the liquid over the salad and toss with a wooden fork until every particle is coated. Serve immediately. Serves 4 to 6 people.

Now Is the Time For a Tall, Icy Drink

Do scorching days "take the tuck out of you?"

Then you need a bracer. There's none better on a hot day than a tall icy glass of fruit drink.

In summertime, it's a good idea to have some charged water, some fruit juices, maybe some ginger ale and root beer, too, always in the refrigerator to prepare a cooling beverage. Fresh mint is another ingredient that's always handy.

When you put sugar into a cold drink, all of it doesn't dissolve. That's not so good. The way to avoid a coating of sugar in the bottom of the glass is to prepare sugar syrup for use with drinks. Boil three cups of sugar in two cups of water for four minutes. Cool, then store in a jar for use as occasion arises.

A Woman's New York

Golden Gate Exposition Setting on Man-Made Island Is Beautiful

San Francisco, July 24.

IF THE New York Fair is a sparkling necklace stretched across the quondam Flushing dump, this city's exposition is a clear-cut and beautiful gem set on the man-made island in the bay.

ALICE HUGHES

Its buildings and its flowers are lovely to see — but best of all is its setting, with the seven-hilled city to landward, and in the other direction the Golden Gate leading to the sea. On our first evening Harry Camp and his pretty daughter, Jean Marcus, of Dallas, fed us sumptuously at the Argentine Pavilion, which corresponds somewhat to the hoity-toity French Building restaurant at the Gotham show. The chill wind and the fog were sweeping in from the Pacific, and old Mr. Hall felt constrained to forego a look at Miss Sally Rand's young beauties. "They'll be wearing long mink coats!" the old sinner muttered.

The ferry ride to San Francisco alone is rich enough in beauty and interest to pay off for everything. I'd never go to that fair any way but across the bay by ferry. Then our host had another joy for us. The noted Mark Hopkins Hotel crowns one of the city's hills, and not long ago they got inspired. Dismantling a couple of mere penthouses, they built a cafe on the inn's summit—entirely glass-enclosed, and producing what must be one of the world's most beautiful views. It is crowded from noon to closing time, for "The Top of the Mark" is now a must for San Franciscans and their visiting firemen. It's a real thrill, and actually produces what our own Rainbow Room could.

Whew! That was enough for one afternoon and evening!

GIRL ABOUT S. F.: But at 9 the next morning I was on my bicycle again, touring a few stores, and at noon Hall and I took the ferry again for Treasure Island. These boats are the Normandies of the ferry world. They have cocktail lounges on board—though the trip takes less than 15 minutes. I must admit I was a trifle shocked to see three middle-aged ladies nibbling old-fashioned cocktails at high noon. O tempora! O mores!

We were met by "Dynamo Dorothy" Liebes, who took us to lunch at the Japanese Building, where we went up against some interesting viands, mostly curry, from the Dutch East Indies.

THERE is something irresistible about San Francisco. The vitality of its air and its people—its beauty and its scenic setting—are certain to win any heart. My great regret of this whole mad junket is that we could not stay longer and see more—visit Oakland and the whole bay country, and accept the hospitality of friends at nearby country homes and ranches.

Man Who Was 'Sweetness Itself' During First Months Of Marriage Is Now Indifferent; Wife Asks Why?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been married nearly two years to a man who was sweetness itself for the first few months. But during the past year he seems to have changed to the extent that he takes me for granted. I have a fiery disposition and am called temperamental. At first, he used to beg me not to leave him, after one of our little quarrels. But now he says nothing and, as a matter of fact, doesn't even seem to pay any attention to my outbursts.

This man is my senior in years, experience and emotions. I want to be kissed and caressed nearly all the time and when I am away from him, I am miserable. In the beginning of our marriage he was tenderly attentive, but now his attitude has changed completely. He treats me as though we had been married 10 or 15 years. I just can't understand it. I have had "honest-to-goodness" plain talks with him about things, asking him point-blank if there is another woman in the case, but his reply is always in the negative. He is with me nearly all the time when we are not working.

When we are out together he looks at every woman on the street, from head to foot. This embarrasses me in the extreme, as I consider it bad manners; aside from the fact that I am so foolishly in love with him. Also, he decieved me by not telling me things which I should have known about him, before we married. I earn more money than he does, and help him financially a bit. But I love him and am the kind of person who wants to make good on any job I start. I do want to make a success of my marriage, but I have too much pride to stay if the man doesn't feel as I do.

While I have a fairly good job here in Washington, I am thinking of resigning and going back to my home town, where I was born, and where there are a few people who really love me. I feel so lonesome and forlorn here. I am in my twenties, fun loving and very affectionate. It seems to me that I am just wasting my life with a man who apparently has no interest in me whatever. Of an evening, he reads the newspapers, listens to the radio, etc. What is your advice? Can I recapture our former happiness? SALLY.

Enemies of Romance

DEAR SALLY: Certain undisciplined aspects of your own behavior are conspiring, I think, to chill your husband's affections. The constant (and almost entirely unnecessary) fireworks of your so-called temperamental disposition, for one thing; and your ravenous claims to devotional attention, for another. All psychologists are familiar with the phenomenon of an essentially normal man rendered psychically impotent by the unprepossessing personality of a nagging, quarrelsome, egotistical, unpredictable, fire-breathing wife. And of other husbands, likewise fundamentally normal, rendered equally incompetent by their frivolous wives' inconsiderate demands for continual love making.

The fact that your husband is undemonstrative in marriage, while gazing with telltale preoccupation upon the charms of other women, suggests that he is hungering for psychic satisfaction which the union does not afford. It is likely that he is a man capable of feeling real tenderness in the marital relationship—a tenderness compounded of mental and spiritual, as well as physical, elements. When the mind and spirit of such a man have been affronted by petty behavior on the part of his wife, he can neither feel nor pretend a full-bodied, normal devotional reaction to her.

Given a situation in which the husband's erstwhile romantic ardor is languishing under a cumulative load of suppressed resentment, and in which his wife (in blithe ignorance of her unwitting offenses of various sorts) constantly belabors him with tacit or outspoken demands for ardent affectional demonstrations — given that situation, you have a marriage that is heading for the rapids.

As the husband vaguely resists his wife's advances, her tension and irritability increase. She burns with resentment in turn. Each falls victim to uneasy self-distrust (the so-called inferiority feeling), so that the possibility of a harmonious adjustment of the difficulty is rendered increasingly remote. Charges and counter-charges of indifference, cruelty, neglect and even infidelity gradually enter in. And, in all too many cases, the marriage winds up in the divorce court.

When such disruptive factors are at work in marriage, the only recourse against divorce is immediate and thorough re-education of both partners in those techniques of behavior which make for a sound psychological adjustment between husband and wife. Any psychiatrist or psychologist to whom you might take your problem could give you pointers of immeasurable benefit. Or a serious, joint reading of such a book as Dr. Marie Stopes' "Married Love" might help.

I think you would be quitting long before you are actually licked, if you were to follow your current childish impulse to resign your job and go back to your parents' home. The fact that you still love your husband, and that he is still sufficiently attached to you to spend all his leisure time in your company, offers a good beginning from which to construct your relationship anew, according to a much better pattern than the haphazard one you have followed to date.

If you lack the means to employ private psychiatric or psychoanalytical counsel, the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene, 1464 Columbia road, telephone ADams 1033, will serve you. Or the Institute's secretarial staff will supply you with a reference list of such specialists, if you are not eligible for its assistance. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Mrs. Thomas Casey, N. Y. Fair's Goodwill Envoy, Entertains Here

Members D. C. Advisory Committee on Women's Participation Are Guests at Mayflower Luncheon; Hostess Gets Suggestions for Improving Exposition

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor

MRS. THOMAS F. CASEY, "goodwill ambassador" for the New York World's Fair entertained at luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel, having as her guests several members of the D. C. Advisory Committee on Women's Participation of the Fair.

Coming to Washington to take stock of local reactions to Grover Whalen's World of Tomorrow, Mrs. Casey has interviewed hundreds of our leading citizens since she arrived on Friday. She left late yesterday for Richmond, where she will spend a couple of days, and then she will be off to Scarlett O'Hara's part of the country to see how the Georgians like the fair; and if not—why not.

Yesterday, following the luncheon, Mrs. Casey discussed the same subject with her guests; and as a result, when she packed her bags to leave later, she had along with her a member of suggestions many written down for future reference.

Back in the days when plans for the fair at Flushing were beginning to take shape, Mrs. Casey was put on the staff. She was one of the first 30 persons to be appointed, in fact; so if there's anybody who knows the outs and ins of the expositions, it is she.

THE COMPANY she entertained yesterday included not only members of the D. C. Committee, but also several from similar groups in other parts of the country. Each State has a committee of a hundred women, all hand-picked as leaders in social, civic and club circles. Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, jr., who is spending the summer with her family in Nonquit, Mass., and could not be present at yesterday's party, is chairman of the D. C. Committee. She serves under Mrs. Vincent Astor, general chairman.

At the long, gladioli-decked table yesterday in the main dining room of the Mayflower, talk naturally revolved around the World's Fair, but it was later, up in Mrs. Casey's suite, that guests got down to brass tacks about what they have heard (and seen) pro and con about it.

THERE WAS MENTION, both in whispered bits at the table and also in the open forum upstairs, that roller-chair and restaurant prices are too steep, and someone pointed out that, in contrast to other expositions, bus travel through the grounds is also rather high.

On the whole, however, those in the company who had been to the Fair were lavish in their praises of it. For example, Miss Annabel Matthews, who stopped over in New York to visit in on her way back from a Cape Cod vacation, pronounced it "a liberal education—something nobody should miss."

I HAVE BEEN to the Fair twice—on the opening day, when it all seemed vastly wonderful but disorganized and unfinished, and once since, when all exhibits, pavilions and shows were open and thriving. I liked it on the whole, although I could not help noticing that emphasis seemed to be commercial and statistical rather than cultural. Guides on the buses dilate at length on the size and cost of each building. Statues apparently are important only if they are so many feet tall, and even Billy Rose's much-publicized aquacade is supposed to take on additional glamour because it is housed in "the largest auditorium on the grounds."

But I still believe the Fair shouldn't be missed. The Futurama, taking visitors on a tour of America in 1960 . . . the nightly symphonic spectacle of the ballet of fountains . . . the world of tomorrow in the Trylon . . . dinner or luncheon in any one of a dozen colorful foreign restaurants . . . and hundreds of other attractions are worth your money any time. As Mrs. Casey said yesterday, "There's something for everbody every minute at the Fair."

FOR YESTERDAY'S party she had cosen a smart Dubonnet and white print frock, worn with a matching snatch of a hat, becomingly tilted to the side and set off with a veil. While her guests were enjoying the last course of the luncheon, she tore away for a radio interview, returning later to join the company unstairs. Meanwhile Mrs. J. Fred Essary took over hostessing duties for her.

Luncheon guests included Mrs. Worth Clark, wife of Senator Clark, of Idaho, who is a committee member in her home State, and who visited the Fair on the opening day; Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, of the Social Security Board, who heads the Mississippi committee; Mrs. Karl Mundt, wife of Representative Mundt, of South Dakota, committee chairman for her home State; Mrs. Ann Archbold, Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor.

Still others were Judge Fay L. Bentley, Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, Miss Janet Fish, Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Mrs. Adelaide Johnson, the widely known sculptor; Mrs. William Lee Cordin, Miss Faustine Dennis, Mrs. Mark Lansburgh, Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, Mrs. W. A. Roberts, Miss Ruth Eleanor Jones, Mrs. Eva Whitford Lovette, Miss Grace Dunham Guest, Mrs. Lloyd W. Biddle, Mrs. Ned Brunson Harris, Mrs. Robert C. Howard, and Mrs. Walter B. Fry.

Colombians Back From Trip

The Counselor of the Colombian Embassy and Senor de Samper-Ortega and their three children, Arnando, Nelson and Beatrice, have returned from a motor trip to the West Coast and a brief stay in New York.

Leaving Washington June 11, they went directly to California, where they visited in a number of cities and spent some time at the Golden Gate Exposition. On their way back they stopped at Yellowstone Park and in Chicago. Returning here last Thursday, they left the following day for New York and came back from there Sunday.

Mrs. Ruth Rohde Is Writing Book

At The Cedars, her home in Alderson, Va., Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen Rhode is in the throes of writing a book to add to the list of those that have already come from her facile pen. Just what the subject is has not been divulged, and probably will not be until it is ready for the book stalls.

The former Minister to Denmark, who is now a collaborator in the travel bureau of the Interior Department, gained fame as a writer a number of years ago. She authored "Elements of Public Speaking," "Leaves From a Greenland Diary" and, more recently a series of Scandinavian fairy tales under the title, "The Castle of the Silver Wood."

When Capt. and Mrs. Borge Rohde arrived in America they toured the continent in a trailer, and after a brief residence in New York City they have settled down in their Virginia home.

Her duties at the Interior Department have to do with encouraging tourists to see America, its scenic beauties as well as the advantages of democratic government in operation.

Miss Clarke Feted At Many Parties; To Be Wed July 28

Others who entertained recently in Miss Clarke's honor include Miss Emily Mitchell, who entertained at a luncheon and linen shower at her home in Chevy Chase, and Miss Josephine Beals, who gave a tea.

Newly-Wed Henry Lehnes Set Out for New Home

Jesse Jones and Wife Go to Golden Gate Fair

Jesse Jones, of the Federal Loan Administration, and Mrs. Jones have arrived in San Francisco, where they will visit the Golden Gate Exposition.

Venezuelans Honor Memory Of Gen. Bolivar

Good-Will Aviators Fly Here for Party at Home Of Charge d' Affairs

In the absence of the Venezuelan Ambassador, the Charge d'Affaires and Senora de Fombona-Pachano entertained at a buffet luncheon yesterday afternoon celebrating the 156th birthday anniversary of the great liberator, Gen. Simon Bolivar, often referred to as "the Washinton of South America."

The Ambassador is in his homeland where it is rumored he will be offered the post of Minister of Foreign Affaires or that of Secretary of the Treasury. Senora de Escalante, wife of the Ambassador, attended the party, as did her daughter, Marie Teresa. They plan to sail around the first of August to rejoin Dr. Escalante. They will be accompanied on the voyage by Senora de Escalante's son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mme. Kerpel Fronius, who recently arrived in this country from Europe.

Rain Moves Party Indoors

Over 100 guests had been invited to yesterday's party which started out as an al fresco affair but was moved indoors somewhat hastily when the rain started. The Fombona-Pachano residence on Colorado avenue lends itself beautifully to outdoor entertainbut the upset in the party added only to the gayety. It was most informal, having been inspired on the "spur of the moment," so to speak.

Of unusual interest were members of the Inter-American Escadrille—a group of South American aviators who had flown down for the occasion. Dressed in their native costumes 19, or so, senoritas—each representing a South American country—were in the party. The girls had arrived via Eastern Air Lines, while their escorts flew their own ships to the Capital from New York. There were 35 members on the goodwill tour.

Dr. Fombona-Pachano is quite an authority on Bolivar and because Venezuela was the great man's birthplace it was more than appropriate that the celebration should have been held at the home of the Fombona-Pachanos.

Several There From Bolivian Legation

Among the guests were representatives from the countries Bolivar liberated. The Counselor of the Bolivian Legation, Senor Don Raul Diez de Medina, was in the company. The Minister and Senora de Guachalla are in the Blue Ridge Mountains for the summer. The First Secretary of the Ecuadorian Embassy and Senora de Crespo were there to drink toasts, honoring the general, as were the Counselor of the Peruvian Embassy and Senora de Garland.

From the Colombian Embassy came the Counselor and Senora de Samper-Ortega; the Military Attache and Senora de Leongomez and the Commercial Attache and Senora de Tono. The First Secretary of the Panamanian Embassy and Senora de Briceno were also there.

The goodwill fliers were received this morning by the Undersecretary of State, Sumner Welles. Following the party the visitors were greeted by the Director General of the Pan-American Union, Dr. Leo S. Rowe and a wreath was laid at the bust of Gen. Bolivar, which is the Hall of Flags in the Union.

Col. Watson Receives Gift

During their brief stay here the fliers presented a miniature copy of the famous equestrain statue of Simon Bolivar, a gift from the President of Venezuela, Senor Eleazar Lopez Contreras, to President Roosevelt. Col. Edwin M. Watson, military aide and secretary to the President, received the gift in his behalf.

The group left last evening in time for the garden supper arranged in their honor by the Panel of Hostesses at the World's Fair, of which Mrs. Winthrop W. Aldrich is chairman. The supper was served in the garden room of the National Advisory Committee Building and was followed by a reception in the Venezuelan Pavilion at the Fair.

Miss Wade, who arrived from England last Saturday, was joined in New York by her aunt, Mrs. M. S. Middleton, of Greenwich, Conn., who accompanied the traveler to Washington. Mr. and Mrs. James S. Vance entertained at breakfast in their home in Georgetown Sunday morning for Miss Wade.

Mrs. R. L. Bacon Sails for Europe

Mrs. Robert Low Bacon and her daughters, the Misses Martha and Virginia Bacon, sailed yesterday on the Gripsholm for a tour of the Baltic and Scandinavian countries.

Also on the Gripsholm is Mrs. Emil Hurja, who will visit in Danzig, Estonia and Leningrad. Later she will stop in Finland for a few days and then go on to Denmark to join her father, Capt. A. C. Andreasen, in Copenhagen for several weeks.

Mrs. Hurja expects to return to Washington in September. Mr. Hurja is now in California on a business trip.

Mrs. La Gorce Gives Luncheon

In compliment to Mrs. William A. Morgan, who, with Mrs. Melville Bell Grosvenor, will sail for Europe this week, Mrs. John Oliver La Gorce entertained at luncheon yesterday in the garden of her home on Kalorama road.

Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg was ranking guest in the company of ten. Others there were Mrs. Thomas W. McKnew, Mrs. Louis G. Caldwell, Mrs. Frances Allen Lindsay, Mrs. George Allen, Mrs. Fred W. Britten, Mrs. Oliver Walker and Mrs. William D. Sullivan.

Argentine Aide Moves Into Home Near Embassy

The lull in the Washington social whirl is giving a number of new arrivals in the diplomatic ranks a breathing spell and a chance to get themselves settled in permanent locations before the big season arrives in the fall.

The Counselor of the Argentine Embassy and Senora de Bunge are now occupying their new home at 1605 New Hampshire avenue northwest, near the Embassy. When they first arrived they made their headquarters at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Also, the Third Secretary and Senora de Villa, who stayed at the Embassy temporarily after their arrival, now are making their home at Thirty-ninth street and Cathedral avenue northwest.

James Clement Dunns Plan Bar Harbor Visit

Mrs. James Clement Dunn and her daughter, Cynthia, will leave next week for Bar Harbor, Me., where they have taken a house for August and September. Mr. Dunn will join them later.

Mrs. Hoffman Visits in West

Mrs. Leonard G. Hoffman is in Hollywood, Calif., where she is the guest of Mrs. Tena Bowen Williams who makes her home there.

Mrs. Hoffman plans to remain on the West Coast for a year as her two sons, Commander Harry D. Hoffman, and Lieut. George Dewey Hoffman are stationed there. Lieut. Hoffman is the godson of the late Admiral George Dewey.

Mrs. Williams is at present engaged in writing the history of the Pomo Indians as well as the publication of their folk tales. She has the co-operation of Chief Eagle Wing in her research work. Also assisting Mrs. Williams is Waano Gano, young artist and illustrator.

A. A. Berle Returns

The Assistant Secretary of State, Adolf A. Berle, jr., returned yesterday to Washington after spending some time at his summer place, Konkapot, at Great Barrington, Mass.

Capron-Birnie Wedding Set For August 3

General's Daughter to Become Bride in Cambridge Ceremony

Miss Margaret Schenck Birnie, daughter of Maj. Gen. Upton Birnie, and Mrs. Birnie, has selected August 3 as the date of her marriage to John Martin Capron, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Capron, of West Newbury, Mass.

The ceremony will take place in Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass., at 4:30 p. m., and will be followed by a reception at the Hotel Continental in Cambridge.

Miss Birnie will have as her maid of honor and only attendant Miss Mary J. Bradley, the sister of Miss Birnie's brother-in-law, Francis I. Brady. Mr. Brady and Mrs. Brady (the former Miss Sue Birnie) made their home in Washington for many years, while Mr. Brady was assistant professor of physics at Georgetown University. They now live in Portsmouth, R. I., where Mr. Brady is professor of mathematics and science at the Priory School.

Miss Birnie was graduated from Western High School here, and of Radcliffe College. In recent years she has made her home in Cambridge, and has been studying at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Mr. Capron is a graduate of Harvard University and Harvard Law School and is practicing law in Boston. The couple will make their home in Cambridge.

Gen. and Mrs. Birnie, who just returned from a month's trip to the West Coast, will leave on July 31 for Cambridge for the wedding and will stay at 11 Gray street, Cambridge, where Miss Birnie has had an apartment for the past three years. During their recent trip to the West Coast, Gen. and Mrs. Birnie went from Washington to New Orleans by boat, crossed to the West Coast by train, visited Berkeley, Calif., Seattle and Vancouver and returned across country through Canada.

Tokyo Woman's Club Is International Body

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Mrs. Cabot Coville, who, with her two sons, Gilbert Grosvenor and Cabot, jr., has just returned from three years' residence in Tokyo, is a member of the Tokyo Woman's Club, in whose membership is represented almost every country of the world.

As wife of a secretary of the American Embassy in Toyko, she is not at liberty to make any comment regarding the international situation but she talked willingly of the woman's club, which is a center of social and cultural activity for many of the foreign women of the Japanese capital. Japanese women also belong.

There are Japanese, Chinese, English, American, French, German, Italian, Belgian and Dutch members and women representing many other countries. The wife of the Turkish Ambassador recently became a member, says Mrs. Coville.

"And is there a friendly spirit despite the intenational tension?"

"Isn't there a friendly spirit among women everywhere?" was Mrs. Coville's reply.

Many Prominent Women Belong

The club has various sections, as do those in this country. They are devoted to literature, drama, civic art, and music. In the music sections are several prominent professional musicians who see that fine artists are provided when their group is in charge of the fortnightly club programs. The same is true of the drama and other sections.

Most of the Japanese women who are members are those who have lived abroad or had contact with the Occident. Among them are Mrs. Etsu Sugimoto, noted author, and her daughter and Baroness Ishimoto, author of "Facing Two Ways."

The meetings are held at the American Club and all sessions are conducted in English, which is more generally spoken than French, says Mrs. Coville. The woman's club also maintains there an excellent library where members gather to read and where tea is served informally once a week.

American Woman Is President

The newly elected president is an American woman, Mrs. R. F. Moss, of Elizabeth, N. J., whose sister is the wife of an American newspaper correspondent. She succeeds the wife of the counsellor of the British embassy.

So many groups are represented that an effort is made to have a president one year from among the diplomatic wives, another from among those serving as missionaries, and then from business and professional groups, at the same time rotating as to nationalities.

Mrs. Coville and her sons stopped for a month in Europe on their return from Japan and arrived in New York last Thursday aboard the S. S. Manhattan. They will leave this week for Canada to spend the summer with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, at Cape Britain Island, Nova Scotia, and will be in Washington next winter. Mr. Coville will arrive home in August.

20 Members of Ohio Girls Club Spend Week-ends in Md. Cottage

Whole Group to Be Their Guests At a Swimming Party and Buffet Supper; Is Only State Women's Society in Capital

Vacations are no problem to members of the Ohio Girls Club who want to spend them nearby. This season 20 of the 160 club members have rented a cottage at Breezy Point, Md., where they spend their week-ends and where some of them are enjoying their leave. Saturday the whole club membership will be entertained there at a swimming party and buffet supper.

The cottage the girls have rented this season was originally built for a tea house and that is the name by which it is known. Those of the small group which remains through the week do their own work, but Saturdays and Sundays, when the 20 assemble, a maid is employed to do the cooking and serve the meals under the supervision of a special committee. Different members are appointed to this committee each week by Miss Fanny Sweeney, who has general supervision of the menus.

The cottage, with its broad screened porches, overlooks Chesapeake Bay. Last year, 14 of the club members occupied a summer place near the Tea House, and enjoyed it so much, eager recruits were added to their number this season. The girls often have private parties during the week as well as those on the week-end.

Miss Roxy Boardman is house chairman, assisted by the other girls in the group. Miss Gladys Prince, president of the club, is among those comprising the summer household and is general chairman of the outing planned for this Saturday.

Miss Prince is one of the charter members of the organization, which was formed 21 years ago. Membership is limited to women who are natives of Ohio or have lived in the Buckeye State. It is the only State women's club in Washington and includes many Government employes. Beginning its season in September, it has social meetings, bowling, bridge and literary discussions during the winter months.

The girls maintaining the cottage this season are Miss Prince, Miss Boardman, Miss Sweeney, Miss Edna Miller, Miss Fanny Davis, Miss May Diehm, Miss Mary Fausnaugh, Miss Martha Montgomery, Miss Rosanna Robuck, Miss Frances Hart, Miss Dorothy Swisshelm, Miss Alice Wolfe, editor of the club's bulletin; Miss Adah Fink, Miss Gladys Watkins, Mrs. Ida Krumhansl, Miss Lela Krumhansl, Miss Louse Freed, Miss Mary Kinney, Mrs. Helen Wangsness and Miss Pearl Zeigen.

Miss Anne Goding Ends 22 Years of Red Cross Service

Retirement of Miss Anne M. Goding, 1735 Crestwood drive, as an active volunteer worker of the District of Columbia chapter, American Red Cross, is announced by Brig. Gen. F. R. Keefer, chapter chairman. Miss Goding will receive the chapter's honor certificate, the second ever to be issued, for outstanding service covering 22 years.

Miss Goding was the first chairman of the chapter's Junior Red Cross when such activities were begun in 1917. She remained chairman for 10 years and, since 1927, has been secretary-treasurer for the junior organization. She was associated for many years with Mrs. Agnes Kinnear, Junior Red Cross chairman for 1927 to 1937, who was the first to receive the chapter honor certificate.

Miss Goding taught in the District schools for 42 years, retiring in 1927 as principal of Wilson Normal School, now Wilson Teachers' College. She has a wide acquaintance among Washington teachers, and she contributed materially toward securing a retirement fund for teaches.

A teacher at the time President Woodrow Wilson, by proclamation, called school children into service with the Red Cross in the war, Miss Goding aided in organizing the first junior membership of the District of Columbia chapter.

Three Week's Vacation Jaunt by Plane Has Made Myre Rhine Permanently Air-Minded

IT'S A WOMAN'S PRIVILEGE to change her mind and Myrl Rhine has done just that—from boat and train to plane. She's permanently airminded, she says, on her return from a jaunt to Memphis, Tenn.; Phoenix, Ariz.; San Francisco and other points in California; a visit to the Boulder Dam and flight over the Grand Canyon on her way home. She did it all in three weeks and had plenty of time for sightseeing and visiting wherever she stopped.

Little things like dropping several hundred feet when the plane hit an air pocket in a storm didn't bother her, but, on the contrary, gave zest to the trip.

She is now getting down to earth and such mundane matters as the job of publicity chairman for the local branch of the American Association of University Women, which she is handling for the second season.

EDWINA AUSTIN AVERY, past president of the District of Columbia Women's Bar Association, was author of an article which appeared a day or two ago in the New York Telegram, defending the rights of a married woman to work and of a working woman to marry.

Mrs. Avery, who is an ardent feminist, and a member of the National Woman's Party, points out that the farm woman and her children have always contributed substantially to the family income, without criticism from anyone. "Why should society so savagely attack the urban woman for doing the same thing the farm woman is doing?" she asks.

MARGARET DAVIS, who writes the column on the Sunday club page of The Post devoted to District of Columbia women in athletics, is now in London working on a thesis for her master's degree in English. She writes that she has had little time for anything relating to athletics since reaching London, but that she played enough ping pong and shuffleboard on the boat going over to last for the summer.

Assault Trial Of D. C. Man in Va. Is Adjourned

The trial of James Edward Gibson, of Washington, on a statutory charge preferred by a 20-year-old Washington telephone operator, in the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia yesterday, was adjourned after ten witnesses had been heard. Judge Robert N. Pollard announced that the question of jurisdiction would be heard after the jury had been dismissed.

The alleged attack is claimed to have occurred on the George Washington Memorial Parkway, between the Key and Memorial bridges, on the Virginia side of the Potomac, on the night of May 10-11, and Gibson was arrested by agents of the Department of Justice.

The prosecution is being conducted by District Attorney Sterling Hutchison and Assistant District Attorney Harry H. Holt, jr., of Norfolk, while Gibson is being defended by Attorneys Walter I. Young, of Alexandria, and Lowell Ewing, of Washington.

The jury is composed of William S. Strother, Charles B. Gray, Morris Loeb, J. Hunter Bowman, Benjamin Abramson, Tom L. Ryan, Clinton Knight, Earl W. Saum, J. E. Schlater, Russell P. Nicholson, E. I. Popkins and Eugene Bode.

Bethesda Renews Its Demand for Bus Fare Cut

The East Bethesda Citizens Association executive committee last night demanded that the Maryland Public Service Commission reaffirm an order which would cut Montgomery County bus rates. The order has been in suspension pending Interstate Commerce Commission proceedings.

In a telegram to the Maryland body, the citizens group said that since the ICC proceedings had been concluded, the Public Service Commission's order of December 3, 1938, should be put into effect.

According to George H. Price, chairman of the association's public utilities committee, bus fares from the National Institute of Health to the District line are 25 cents, while under the suspended order, they would be only 10 cents. He said the ICC rules applied the bus concern's appeal for higher rates.

Virginia Youth Is Accused Of Slaying His Wife, 17

Waynesboro Resident's Attorney to Ask Bail for Man Charged With Shooting Mate as She Sat at Piano in Home

By the Associated Press

Waynesboro, Va., July 24.—Edward David Hopkins, 20, was removed today to the Augusta County Jail at Staunton to await a preliminary hearing on a charge that he shot and killed his wife, Helen Gibson Hopkins, 17, here Saturday night.

Police Chief R. L. Switzer obtained a warrant today charging Hopkins with "unlawfully and feloniously committing murder by inflicting a mortal wound upon Helen Gibson Hopkins with a pistol."

Prior to his removal to Staunton, Hopkins was granted permission to see his wife's body and was escorted to the funeral parlor.

Louis J. Jordan, Waynesboro attorney, said he had been retained as counsel for Hopkins and that he would confer with Commonwealth's Attorney John D. White and Trial Justice W. Terrell Sheehan tomorrow in an effort to set bail. He also planned to request a preliminary hearing.

Chief Switzer said Mrs. Hopkins was shot with a pistol as she sat on a piano stool in Hopkins' apartment Saturday. The couple, married last October 22, had begun housekeeping only a week ago.

Rockville Sisters Plan Court Fight Over Postoffice

A second battle over who owns the lot that Uncle Sam put a $75,000 postoffice on at Rockville is impending.

Mrs. Samuel A. Wimsatt, who, with her sister, Mrs. Claude Tschiffely, made a demonstration on behalf of their alleged ownership during the dedication exercises last Saturday, said yesterday that she is looking for a good lawyer, with a view of instituting injunction proceedings.

"I want my constitutional rights and the Government can't take them from me," said Mrs. Wimsatt.

She said that speed of action is necessary because she hears the Procurement Division soon will turn the building over to the Postoffice Department and that might clinch matters on the side of the Government.

The two sisters, who contend the Government came in and set a big building down on property belonging to them—and without asking their leave—picketed the building Saturday, when the dedication exercises were in progress.

400 Complete R. O. T. C. Course

Fort George G. Meade, Md., July 24 (AP).—Four hundred college students ended their six-week reserve officers' training course tonight by completing an overnight hike under field conditions and spending the night in pup tents.

The R. O. T. C. enrolees will remain in camp two days more, but their training period was completed tonight. They will check in equipment and supplies before shoving off for home.

The student officers spent the evening before their tents watching a farewell "stunt" program around a camp bonfire.

Silver Spring Launches Overtime Parking Drive

A drive against overtime parking in the business area of Silver Spring, Md., was launched by police yesterday when 15 "warning" tickets were issued.

Officer Frank Lane, who has been detailed to the job, said the persons ticketed yesterday and today would not be prosecuted. Beginning tomorrow, however, he said offenders would be fined. The parking limit in the business area is one hour.

Montgomery Grand Jury May End Session Today

The Montgomery County grand jury which convened at Rockville yesterday will probably conclude its session today, State's Attorney Ben G. Wilkinson announced.

George P. Henderson, of Rockville, is foreman of the jury, which is required by law to meet every nine weeks, unless otherwise instructed by the court. Those against whom indictments are returned today will be slated for trial at the November term.

43 Arrested in Week-End Face Alexandria Judge

Judge James Reece Duncan, of Alexandria Police Court, yesterday morning faced a docket of 43 offenders arrested over the week-end, principally drunk and disorderly cases. Sixteen went to jail in lieu of paying fines, and one case was held for action of the grand jury.

Josephine Wallace, colored, was charged with the robbery of $9 from George White, also colored.

Inspector Holmes Warns Drive 'Must Be Taken Seriously'

Eighteen District residents were arrested for jaywalking yesterday as Inspector W. E. Holmes, Traffic Division chief, ordered patrolmen from each precinct assigned at busy intersections for special pedestrian law enforcement duty.

Inspected Holmes called for intensification of the drive on jaywalkers after conferences with the 12 precinct captains and Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer.

Declaring "jaywalkers will be driven off the streets . . . and I don't mean maybe," Inspector Holmes said every controlled intersection in Washington will be canvassed by specially assigned police to impress Washington pedestrians that the regulations must "be taken seriously."

Police Strategy

Starting at the busiest intersection in their respective precincts yesterday, the officers will be stationed at every controlled intersection in turn in the order of their congestion. They will remain at each long enough to make pedestrians frequenting the intersection "conscious" of the safety drive.

Inspector Holmes said that a survey made over the week-end revealed that jaywalking offenders are most numerous in outlying districts, rather than in the downtown area of peak congestion. Most arrests for pedestrian law violations have been in the Ninth and Tenth precincts, he said.

Traffic division records reveal that the number of accidents have fallen off by about half, in the four months since passage of the pedestrian law, as compared with the corresponding period last year.

A total of 154 pedestrians has been arrested since invoking of the regulation of the law March 10.

Opinion Divided

Among those arrested yesterday, sentiment was divided about the anti-jaywalking drive.

Samuel D. Chambliss, 42-year-old salesman, of 527 Underwood street northwest, who forfeited $2 for crossing on the red signal at Fourteenth and Irving streets northwest, said "as a driver myself" he could appreciate the regulation and was "all for it." He said he crossed against traffic because he was thinking of business matters.

Of another school of thought, however, was a pedestrian arrested at Fourteenth and Pennsylvania avenue northwest—one of seven arrested at the congested intersection yesterday—who described the regulation as "assinine."

Montgomery Ex-Official Asks Parole

Pugh, Who Prosecuted Souder, Supports Former Relief Head's Petition for Release

Philip Ray Souder, former Montgomery County relief supervisor, who has applied for parole upon serving 16 months of a four-year prison term for forgery, yesterday had the support of the man who prosecuted him, James E. Pugh, former State's attorney.

Pugh revealed yesterday he had writen Herman Moser, parole commissioner, asking him to approve Souder's application.

Convicted of $25 Forgery

Souder was one of six public officials who were indicted for embezzlement of county funds, and the only one convictd. The jury released one of the others, the State nolle prossed charges against three others and the fifth has not been tried. Souder was tried and convicted April 27, 1938, on a charge of forging and uttering a $25 relief check.

Pugh's letter to the parole commissioner read in part:

"I want you to know that, as prosecutor of Souder, it is my honest conviction and firm belief that the period he has been incarcerated is sufficient punishment for him under all circumstances. I knew Souder for many years prior to his conviction and feel confident that if you grant him a parole the ends of justice will have been served.

Petition Being Circulated

"If I can be of any further service to you when this matter comes up for a hearing I shall consider it a pleasure, even to the extent of being present."

Souder's hearing is scheduled for August, when he will have served one-third of his term. His attorney, Kenneth Lyddane, announced that a petition was being circulated among his friends in the county urging that a parole be granted.

Private Enterprise Active in Prince Georges; 10 Boys Raffle Off Cake to Finance Carnival

"Step right up and shoot," was the chant that attracted youngsters to the "shooting gallery" (top) at the two-day carnival opened yesterday by Hyattsville boys, attempting to raise funds for their "pee wee" ball team. With $1.50 From 'Chalklit' Layer, Committee Get Donation of Lumber, Build Stands Themselves and Reap $7 Profit in Day

With a capital investment of $1.50, raised by raffling off a "chawklit" layer cake, Hyattsville, Md., youngsters yesterday opened a two-day carnival on a vacant lot at Oakwood road and Rheems avenue.

Boys from 11 to 15 took their places behind improvised stands and began their chattering appeal to passersby at 1 p. m. For a week they had been busy building the booths and draping them with crepe paper, as far as the limited budget would permit.

When they swung into action, it was with the zeal of a seasoned sideshow "barker."

Boy, 15, Is Treasurer

"Step right up and get three pennies for one . . . "Toss two pennies in the dish and take home this fine boat for your son . . . Try your aim—hit the toy soldiers and get a fine prize . . ."

Fifteen-year-old Bob Springer, of 64 Rheems avenue, treasurer of the committee in charge of the affair, walked about from booth to booth, making change and casting an appraising eye over the scene.

The carnival idea, he explained, was born of necessity. The Cecil Midgets, a "pee-wee" baseball team in the Prince Georges County League, was badly in need of some equipment. It was a knotty problem. But one rainy day when the boys were down in the dumps because of the financial condition of the club treasury, someone suggested a carnival.

The idea took hold. Marie Reeves, an older sister of one of the fellows, was induced to bake a "chawklit" cake. Then the team sold chances and raised the sizable sum of $1.50. This was invested in prizes, crepe paper, hot dogs and soft drinks. The lumber was donated and the club went to work to build the booths.

They put up a shooting gallery. Two of the boys molded some lead soldiers for targets and two others donated b. b. guns. Anotheer stand was equipped for a " spill-the-milk bottle" game, with one of the boys donating his ten-pin set to be used in lieu of the usual wooden milk bottles, and baseballs. A metal tub was filled with water and a plate floated in the center to be used for a "pitch-penny" game.

Ballons were tied on the side of another stand and someone else brought some feathered darts. A "loop-the-loop" game was set up, with a set of rubber horseshoes and a wooden stake driven in the ground in the center of another stand. The boys also built a stand for hot dogs and soft drinks, and an ice cream company took a concession.

$7 Taken in First Day

Hand-printed signs were tacked up on each stand, reading:

"Dart Game. Three Throws for 1 Cent." "Spill-the-Milk. Three Throws for 1 Cent." "Shooting Gallery. Five Shots for 1 Cent." "Loop-the-loop. Four Throws for 1 Cent." "Grab Bags, 3 Cents and 5 Cents."

At the close of the first day, Treasurer Springer appeared quite satisfied. About $7 was taken in and the chances of a successful baseball season loomed pretty bright for the Cecil Midgets.

Others on the committee included Billy Cecil, 11; Raymond Vorndran, 13, and Tommy Moser, 12. They were assisted by Jimmy Reeves, 11; Raub Brackbill, 13; George Pettit, 13; Dickey Procter, 11; Louis Hiben, 11, and Clifton Conley, 11.

Dog Poisoner Hunted in Alexandria

3 More Pets Killed; Toll Rises to 14; Youngster Tearful

Alexandria police last night intensified their search for a dog-hating poisoner after three more pets had been fatally drugged. Fourteen dogs have died of poisoning in the last three weeks.

Two dogs belonging to Martin E. Greene, business manager of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce, died of poisoned meat yesterday despite efforts of a veterinarian to save them.

The pets, Buddie, an English sheep dog that had been with the family for ten years, and Punkie, a rat terrier, were let out of the Greene home at Mount Vernon Park for a few minutes. They ran into a neighbor's yard to play and fell victims to poisoned meat that had been placed there.

Fourteen-year-old Donald Moore tearfully reported to police that his dog also had succumbed yesterday.

Thus far no clew to the poisoner has been uncovered. The meat which killed the Greene dogs was sent to the Health Department for analysis in the hope that the poison might be traced to its purchaser. The poisoner thus far has confined his activities to the George Washington Park area.

All Favorites, Except Mako, Win at Net

Andy Oliveri, D. C. Champion, Close To Leaders With 73 in Baltimore

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Baltimore, July 24.—Teen-age youth topped the National Public Links tournament in its opening round here today.

A pair of strapping strokers who live 4,000 miles apart—Gerry Bert, jr., of Seattle, Wash., and Luke Barnes, of Atlanta, Ga.—finally cracked the par of 72 and paced the field of 177 starters.

Bert, an 18-year-old, 6-foot 3 member of the Seattle team who weighs 210 pounds, clipped a shot from regulation figures on each nine of the Mount Pleasant course with three birdies, a bogey and 14 pars, to post a 70, low for the day. Barnes, 19-year-old schoolboy from Atlanta, who could pass for 29, played the hottest 15 holes of the day, but went over twice on the last three and was second with 71.

Oliveri Fourth

Andy Oliveri, the District's city publinks champion, seventh player off the tee, had a golden opportunity to be the first under par figures, but made two mistakes on the finishing holes and posted a 73, a tie for fourth lowest score of the day.

Eight pars and an 8-footer for a birdie on the third hole comprised Oliveri's outgoing nine, while he dropped his second shot close to the pin on the thirteenth hole for another birdie. But he went over three times coming back, scuffing a niblick on the tenth, pushing a tee shot on the seventeenth and letting par slip away by 3-putting the eighteenth green, his first offense of the day on the greens.

The other members of the District's Harding Cup Team did not fare as well. Jim Gipe, the instrument maker in the Naval Research Laboratory, could blame five three-putt greens, that cost at least five strokes, and two bad tee shots—on 14 and 18—that cost five more for his ten over par 82.

Gipe in Trouble

Gipe was the victim of an unfortunate incident on the ninth hole that nearly led to his disqualification, but officials cleared him after a hasty conference. Waiting while his partner went in the clubhouse to repair his glasses, Gipe replayed a trap shot for a photographer, that is technically against the rules.

Robert L. Morris, third player from the District, was out of the running with a 15 over par round of 87. Out in 43 with double-bogey sixes on the third and seventh holes, his putter continued to betray him on the back nine and mixed with a few bad iron and wood shots he came back in 44.

The Los Angeles team apparently brought the Harding Cup East just for the ride as the trophy was apparently going to the West Coast city representatives for another year. Jack Brande, Don Erickson and Leonard Egbert posted a 221 total, that was five strokes better than an unheralded band from Lincoln, Nebr. The District trio was out of the running with 241.

Most colorful of the par 72 scorers was Arthur Armstrong, of Honolulu, Hawaii, with 37-35. Don Erickson, of Los Angeles, whose backers were taking 5 to 1 that he would win the medal; Michael Cestone, of Montclair, N. J., with a pair of 36's and Ralph Reed, of Lincoln, Nebr., whose card showed seven 3's, with three of them in succession on the front nine.

Oliveri finished in a six-way tie at 73, with Al Huegelmeyer, leader of the host city's contingent of seven, the 1938 finalist, from Vancouver, Wash.; Stanley Kroll, Utica, N. Y., who had nine 4s going out for a 36, and back in 37; Marshall Springer, 17-year-old player from Chicago, the only knicker-wearer in the tournament, and Paul Genung, Dayton, Ohio.

Strafaci Disqualified

Biggest disappointment was Tommy Strafaci, the touted member of the New York delegation and brother of former Champion Frank, 1935 titleholder. The second most famous of the golfing Strafacis, on the scene for a little practice in the morning, went home, came back an hour later and was disqualified. He knew his starting time was 12:10, but somehow had it confused with 1:30, and it was entirely his own fault. His older brother, Domenic, took his place on the New York Harding Cup team and had 80.

Two-time former champion Charles Fererra had a 79, while the defending titleholder, Al Leach, hardly bigger than his driver, was satisfied with a 75. William Russell, winner of the driving contest, from Minneapolis, and a former East Potomac golfer, had an 81, a score matched by John Armacost, that hurt Baltimore's team total.

Morris Needs Record

The field will take a crack at another qualifying round tomorrow with the low 64 swinging into the match play on Wednesday. With 62 scores 77 and under today, it will take around 154 to qualify, that means Oliveri could take 80 or more and still qualify, but Gipe needs a par round and Morris needs a course record.

John Teal, of Jacksonville, Fla., couldn't take Baltimore's heat . . . after turning in a respectable 78, he collapsed and was an occupant of

Cold in Back Causes Gene To Default

Gil Hunt Defeats Bellis, 6-3, 6-3; Sabin and Mulloy Taken to Extra Sets

By the Associated Press

Seabright, N. J., July 24.—Tennis ran true to form today in the opening round of the fifty-second Seabright invitation tournament, which is famous for its one or two annual first-round upsets. The seeded performers and others of high rank won with almost monotonous regularity. The only break in the seedings came when second-ranked Gene Mako, of Los Angeles, defaulted because of a cold in his back.

Back for his first taste of competition since winning at Wimbledon, Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, the No. 1 man, received a bye. He will not see action until he plays Carlton Rood, of Chapel Hill, N. C., tomorrow. Winner in 1937 and 1938, Riggs can retire the Seabright bowl with another victory.

Bryan Grant Advances

Jack Crawford, the veteran Australian, also drew a first-round bye, but the other favorites, from Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, of Atlanta, No. 3, down to Wayne Sabin, of Portland, Oreg., No. 7, won handily. The four seeded players in the women's singles, headed by last year's runner-up, Dorothy May Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., also won without much trouble. Miss Bundy was seeded first when Alice Marble decided not to defend the women's title.

Only the last two on the men's list, Sabin and sixth-ranked Gardnar Mulloy, of Miami, Fla., were forced to play extra sets, while all the women leaders won in straight sets.

Grant, making his grass court debut for the season, turned back the New York veteran, Armand L. Bruneau, 6—1, 7—5. Fourth seeded Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., runner up to Riggs here last year as well as at Wimbledon, eliminated Philip W. Moore, of Montclair, N. J., 6—1, 6—1, and Frank Parker, recent winner at Spring Lake, N. J., won by the same count from John P. Wendell, Princeton University player from Pottstown, Pa.

Gil Hunt Winner

Mulloy lost the first set to Ronald Edwards, Berkeley, Calif., southpaw, winning, 1—6, 6—2, 6—1, while Sabin prevailed against husky Russell Bobbitt, of Atlanta, 6—2, 4—6, 6—3.

Gilbert Hunt, of Washington, D. C., fresh from an exhibition victory over Bitsy Grant Sunday, had little trouble in winning his first round match from Isadore H. Bellis, Philadelphia, 6—3, 6—3.

Miss Bundy, pressed in the first set, eliminated Cecile Bowes, of Philadelphia, 9—7, 6—1, while second-seeded Dorothy Workman, of Los Angeles, had an easier time with another Philadelphian, Edith Clark, winning, 6—4, 6—0.

Helen Pedersen, of Stamford, Conn., and Virginia Wolfenden, of Los Angeles, ranked third and fourth, came through as expected. The former defeated Marguerite Madden, of Boston, 6—4, 6—2, while Judy Atterbury, a home club player, bowed to Miss Wolfenden, 6—1, 6—1.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Mount Pleasant Golf Club, Baltimore, July 24.—The peepul armed themselves with golf clubs today—Bastile Day in what was once the snooty game of golf. They were here for the National Public Links tournament, whacking away at the little white balls in an honest-to-God big-league tournament, a pleasure formerly reserved for quality folks who had too much of both time and money to spare.

POVICH

Once a year they hold this tournament and for most of the 177 store clerks and mail carriers, policemen and barkeeps, schoolboys, gas workers and shipping clerks it's the only week in the year when they aren't lugging their own bags, when they can play a bit of de luxe golf. During this one week they employ caddies, command a respectful silence when they shoot and play from traps freshly raked. This week they go bourgeoise, and it's wun'nerful.

This is the golf tournament that last year could be won by a WPA worker, and was. Al Leach is here again this year, helped to a better job by his golf fame and able now to pay his caddy. At Cleveland last summer Leach's caddy was his kid brother, for the very plain reason that the champion-to-be either could not produce or could not spare the caddy fees. Heaven only knows how many of the 177 in this year's tournament are paying their caddies without a deep sensation of pain in their change pocket, but they go along blithely partaking of tournament play and loving it.

This tournament isn't golf's melting pot, exactly. It's merely the big round-up of common folks, either too poor to join golf clubs or sensibly denying themselves that extravagance. The big-shot amateur golfers aren't here. You can't belong to a club and play in the public links affair. But the United States Golf Association is very patronizing toward the pay-as-you-go golfers. The U. S. G. A. has taken charge of the tournament.

They're Enjoying Heavenly Service

Like some child of the storm, the National Public Links tournament was picked up tenderly by the U. S. G. A., and bedecked in all the trappings of the big-league tournaments. A bit officious, perhaps, but, at the same time, efficient, officials of the U. S. G. A. superintend the tournament in stern dignity, and twilight golfers who never dared drive into a preceding foresome on the public links for fear their ball would be confiscated, are getting service here that must seem heavenly.

Save for the caddy fees, it's a free show all around, with spectators paying no tax, and cokes selling at only a dime. And this one week the public links folks don't stop for lunch at the counter to wolf a ham on rye with a malted milk but relax in a shaded clubhouse and are served. You know, just like the big shots who pay $300 a year green fees and curse Jackson for serving the caviar on a flat plate.

For at least one reason, though, and despite the elaborate press tent, the flunkies with ropes to restrain the galleries and the de luxe scoreboard, you'd never mistake this for the National Amateur. You'd know that this was a bit different sort of big tournament because of the motley golfing costumes. You can take a good share of the public links out of a public links golfer if you transport him to a big tournament, but seemingly you can't take away his eyeshade.

And their shoes. It's easy to see that they're not fresh from the hands of Sambo, the locker room boy. They're store shoes all right, but it's easy to see that they spent quiet a stretch of service in street wear before they reached the shop where they attach sets of spikes for a buck-fifty. And those lightweight ensembles, with trousers and shirts to match, in deep blues and flaming yellows at only $3.95 for the outfit, they're seemingly the badge of the public links golfer who wants to dress for the big tournament.

The Boys Really Shoot Some Great Golf

But fine clothes don't make the fine golfer, as Socrates, or maybe it was Confucius, mused, and these public links folks played some golf today that would be the envy of the finest amateurs in the land. Gerry Bert, an 18-year-old kid who is going to work his way through Washington State U. threw a 35, 35—70 at the first 18 holes today which was a work of the golfing art, and Luke Barnes, a hill-billy lad from Georgia who never did tuck his shirt in, toured the course in a sizzling 71.

For five brief minutes, incidentally, young Barnes basked in newfound fame. Early in the afternoon when he finished his round, his 71 was low for the day and he was immediately besieged by reporters and photographers popping questions at him, asking his life history and background as a golfer. All of a sudden somebody reported that young Bert has checked in with a 70, a new low, and Barnes saw his audience disappear as if he were a case of leprosy with black plague running interference.

The clock won't strike midnight for the 177 Cinderella golfers for five more days. Then they'll go back to their humpy tees, their flat fairways and their sand greens, their hams on rye and the used-ball counter. But this week, thanks to Fairy-Godfather U. S. G. A., they're having their fling and the champion they crown will be more nearly the golf champion of the people of the United States than any big-shot winner of the National Open.

Al Houghton Wins 'Sudden Death' Play

Bedford, Pa., July 24.—Al Houghton, of Washington, D. C., and Red Francis, of Hollidaysburg, Pa., tied for first place today in the Bedford Springs Open golf tournament with cards of 141, but Houghton won first money in a "sudden death" best ball playoff.

Barrett Melvin, of Pittsburgh, toured the course with a 68 on the morning round to lead the field but his putter failed him in the afternoon and he turned in a 74 for a total of 142.

HOUGHTON

Defending Champion Julius Platte, of Memacolin, highly regarded in the field of 100 contestants, dubbed in with 150.

Houghton carded a 69 on the morning round and followed it up with a 72 in the afternoon. Francis took 72 in the morning but shot 69 on the second 18 holes.

Houghton won the playoff on the first green when he shot a four. Francis missed a 2-foot putt to go down with a 5.

Davey O'Brien Named Leading Grid Player

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 24.—Texas Christian's little quarterback, Davey O'Brien, was stamped tonight as the most highly regarded player in the country by the Nation-wide poll to choose a college all-star football squad which will play the New York Giants, pro champions, in Soldier Field next month.

O'BRIEN

In the final tabulation O'Brien, passer de luxe and leader of T. C. U.'s undefeated eleven last fall, polled 1,204,516 votes, highest total of any player and assured him of starting at quarterback when the collegians meet the Giants the night of August 30.

The starting line-up, with the vote totals of each player follows:

TACKLES—Joe Mihal, Purdue, 829,617; Bob Haak, Indiana, 784,298.

CENTER—Charles Brock, Nebraska, 693,112.

QUARTERBACK—O'Brien.

HALFBACKS — Bob MacLeod, Dartmouth, 846,811; Marshall Goldberg, Pittsburgh, 812,524.

FULLBACK—Howard Weiss, Wisconsin, 1,108,762.

The college squad will be composed of 69 players, 23 from the Big Ten, 10 others from Middle West schools outside the Western Conference; 11 from the East; 9 from the South and Southwest, and 9 from the Far West.

The college squad will report here August 12 to begin practice for the game.

Chiozza to Play Again; Leg Mends

New York, July 24 (AP).—Lou Chiozza, Giant infielder, who broke his left leg in a game with the St. Louis Cardinals last week, is mending nicely and will play ball again next season, club officials said today.

Leo J. Bondy, vice president and secretary, said Chiozza must remain in a hospital for some days yet, but that X-ray pictures revealed both breaks were clean and that the Memphis Italian will be able to resume his career next spring.

Nats Resume Here Today; Toss Leonard at Tigers

Home again in the friendlier confines of Griffith Stadium after an unhappy swing through the West, the Nats will toss Dutch Leonard at the Tigers today in the start of a three-game series.

Washington's immediate objective is fifth place, now in the possession of the Tigers and 8½ games distant, but while battling Detroit the Nats will be casting an apprehensive over-the-shoulder look at the Athletics who are only a half-game to the rear in seventh place.

Archie McKain, a left-hander obtained by the Tigers from the Red Sox last Winter, is Manager Del Baker's pitching choice for today.

Manager Bucky Harris will be presenting Washington fans with their first glimpse of his new first baseman, Rookie Mickey Vernon who will be unveiled at the most embarrassing time, inasmuch as he is boasting a mere .161 batting average for 16 games on the road with the Nats.

Harris Lauds Vernon

In a conference with Clark Griffith yesterday, Harris submitted a flattering report on young Vernon despite his low batting average. "The fellow is the slickest thing we've had on first base for several seasons," said Harris. "He has been a marvel defensively, especially on poor throws by the infielders, and there have been plenty of those.

"His batting average lies a bit, too. He's been hitting plenty of hard balls but they haven't been falling safe. As soon as he looks over the pitching a bit better, he'll get his share of hits."

The Nats open their home stand with two notable casualties. Pitcher Harry Kelley, recently returned from a rest cure at Hot Springs where his swollen knees were treated, suffered a recurrence of his trouble on Sunday at Cleveland and is out of the lineup indefinitely. X-ray pictures revealed that the right thumb of Catcher Rick Ferrell was not fractured, but he will be out of action for at least another week.

Travis' Play a Feature

Harris reported also to Griffith that the outstanding feature of the Nat's play in the West aside from the pitching revival of Joe Krakauskas was the clever play of Cecil Travis at shortstop. In the year of his worst batting slump, Travis has been offsetting his failure at the plate with sensational work in the field. He has made only one error in 20 games, and a good share of his defensive play has been of the game-saving type.

Krakauskas and Leonard, however, have been the only dependable pitchers on Harris' staff, now reduced to seven by the incapacitation of Kelley. The abject failure of Ken Chase, Joe Haynes and Pete Appleton leaves Harris with his worst pitching problem since he returned to his job here in 1935.

Van Mungo, Ankle Broken, Is Lost to Dodgers Six Weeks

By the Associated Press

New York, July 24.—The Brooklyn Dodgers today announced the purchase of an outfielder to bolster their faltering team and the loss of Pitcher Van Mungo.

MUNGO

While the team was heading West, President Larry MacPhail revealed that Brooklyn had bought Outfielder Fred (Dixie) Walker from the Detroit Tigers for an unannounced price and that Mungo had suffered a broken ankle in Sunday's game with the Cardinals and would be out at least six weeks.

Mungo was injured sliding into second base while running for Art Parks in yesterday's second game. X-rays revealed the fracture today.

Walker, who will join the club at Chicago tomorrow, played with the Yankees and Chicago White Sox before being traded to Detroit in 1937

Chicago Bears Sign Luckman, Columbia Star

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 24.—The money lure of professional football became too great today for Sid Luckman, Columbia University's triple-threat star of last season.

Luckman, 194-pound back, signed a two-year contract with the Chicago Bears of the National Pro League, giving Owner-Coach George Halas four freshmen backs to fight for the quarterback and left halfback spots.

Luckman had said repeatedly in the past he would pass up the cash and carry game to help his brother run a trucking business in his native City of New York. But after signing today he said he would retain an interest in the concern and work there during the off season.

Second All-America

The new Bear recruit completed 66 passes out of 132 attempts for 868 yards in 1938 while competing with a so-so Columbia team. He gained 4.6 yards per try in 92 times and did most of the team's punting. This record earned him a spot on the second all-America.

"I don't think I should have any more trouble making the grade against pro competition than in college," Luckman said after signing. "After all, I'll be playing with one of the best pro teams and that should help me a lot. But I've seen a lot of pro ball and I know the competition is fierce."

Athletics Win 'Mack Day' Game Over Penn A. C.

Cooperstown, N. Y., July 24 (AP).—The Philadelphia Athletics defeated the Penn Athletic Club, of Philadelphia, 12 to 6, today in a "Connie Mack Day" game played in connection with baseball's 100th anniversary.

Mack, manager of the Athletics, is ill and did not attend, but sent a telegram saying he had "banked on meeting many of my old comrades whom I have played with and against in my many years of baseball."

His son, Earl, told the crowd of 2,500 that the grand old man of baseball is "up and around now and in a couple of weeks will again take full charge of his club.

Hungarian Runner In London Event

London, July 24 (AP).—Miklos Szabo, the durable Hungarian who campaigned unsuccessfully in the United States last winter, has entered the mile race here August 7 against Blaine Rideout, of the United States, and Sydney Wooderson and Denis Peil, of England.

Szabo holds the accepted world's record for 2 miles in 8 minutes 56 seconds, and once set a world 3,000-meter standard. Sixteen nations will be represented in the meet, which will be featured by the return "grudge" duel between Wooderson and Rideout, principals in the recent "bumping" incident at Princeton.

Pitcher Breaks Arm Hurling Fast Ball

Poplar Bluff, Mo., July 24 (AP).—It was the seventh inning. Marvin Zoll, 17-year-old pitcher, took his customary windup and let go with a fast ball. Then he collapsed.

At a hospital it was found that Zoll's right arm was broken just above the elbow.

Kansas City Signs Newark Club Player

Kansas City, July 24 (AP).—Ruppert Thompson, former major league player, was obtained from Newark in the International League by Kansas City today to bolster the Blues' crippled outfield. A trio of Kansas City flychasers is on the bench with injuries.

Ferdinand, Ex-Bull, Is So Sorry Now

By the United Press.

Boston, July 24.—A former "bull" named Ferdinand sorrowfully said tonight that the goading of a Spanish Bee would keep him from the thing he most loved—National League baseball.

LOPEZ

Because Ferdinand G. Brabant, a former policeman, jumped from the grandstand to grapple with the Boston Bees' fiery Spanish catcher, Al Lopez, a municipal judge barred him from watching future games this season at National League park. A disturbance charge was filed.

"I'll tell you how it all happened and you see if you think I'm to blame," Brabant, a self-styled "former harness bull" said in discussing the fracas.

"I'm seeing my first game of the year and I'm down in the grandstand near the plate. I always sit there because I used to be a semi-pro catcher and I like to see the other guys work.

"Well, in the seventh there's a little, easy pop-fly right behind the plate. Lopez stumbles around and finally misses it and I say to him 'Lopez you're a big punk.' You see, I'm so interested in seeing the Bees win I get all excited and I yell louder than I think."

"Come out here and say that."

"Well," Brabant continued, "before I think I jump over the rail and I'm starting for Lopez on the run. Its lucky I don't get a swing at him because I used to be a pro fighter and I might of killed him."

"He (Lopez) takes a swing at me and I ducks. I ain't spent 15 years catching semipro not to be on the watch for something like that. I start to step inside and let him have one when the whole team gets there and shoves me and Lopez away and I go back to the stands.

"Well, the game ends and the cops get me for disturbance and I have to spend the day in court getting things straightened out. And on top of everything, they keep me from seeing the Bees play anymore this year—and me a Bees fan, too.

"The only thing I can see to do now is to stay home and play with my softball team. But I still say Lopez should have had that ball. My 18-year-old boy could have nailed it easy."

Allie Ritzenberg Regains Public Parks Net Championship

Stocklinski Loses 5-Set Title Match

Victor, Hampered by a Cut Foot, Whips Foe, 3-6, 6-4, 6-2, 5-7, 6-4, To Recapture Crown

By Jack Munhall.

Lanky 20-year-old Allie Ritzenberg, University of Maryland student, returned to the throne of the public parks tennis realm after an absence of one year yesterday when he whipped Ray Stocklinski, defending champion, in a gruelling five-set final match on the Rock Creek courts.

Playing steadily despite the discouraging facts that Stocklinski won the fourth set after trailing 3—5 and averting a match point and that he finished play with a bothersome cut on his left foot, Ritzenberg won, 2—6, 6—4, 6—2, 5—7, 6—4.

Ritzenberg, who holds the Southern Conference doubles title with Nathan Arkin, displayed an unusually consistent brand of tennis to average his straight-set setback by Stocklinski in the semifinal round of this tournament last year.

Injures Foot

With the score favoring him at 3—0 and 40—15 in the final set Ritzenberg scraped a hole through both sock and shoe and inflicted a cut on the big toe of his left foot in lunging to meet one of Stocklinski's drop shots.

After his injured foot was bandaged Ritzenberg returned to the courts and promptly went into a temporary tailspin while Stocklinski pulled up to even terms at 3—3. Allie braced then, however, and ran out the final two games with loss of only two points. He broke Stocklinski's service in the decisive game at love as the loser committed three errors, including a double fault.

A Good Exhibition

Stocklinski's passive resistance in the final two games was surprising after his gallant comeback only a few minutes before when he had captured four consecutive games after Allie held a match point to win the fourth set, 7 to 5.

The match was very well played despite intense heat and humidity which took a heavy toll from the contestants who played 49 games in approximately 2½ hours of actual play. Stocklinski, three years Ritzenberg's senior at 24, seemed to have suffered the most from the devitalizing sun.

Stocklinski was slow in getting started, but overcame a 2-0 deficit to take the first set as Ritzenberg made the mistake of trying to match baseline games with his steadier opponent. Allie changed his strategy in the second set and took the net whenever he had the chance and squared the match by holding his own service and breaking Stocklinski's in the ninth and tenth games, respectively.

The third set was all Ritzenberg as Stocklinski appeared very weary. The Maryland student broke a 1-1 tie and took four straight games for a 5-1 lead. Stocklinski held his service in the seventh game to pull to 2-5, but Ritzenberg banged over three placements to run out the eighth game.

Charlotte Decker set the stage for a repetition, in personnel at least, of last year's final round in the women's singles. The bespectacled former playgrounds champion defeated Hazel Bishopp in a semifinal match, 6—0, 1—6, 6—4, and will meet Defending Champion Willie O'Steen for the title today at 4 o'clock.

Abe Rosenfield, who abandoned his southpaw delivery and workd the entire distance with his right arm, yielded but five hits and struck out 11 for Carpel's, but walked six men while being charged with the defeat.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, July 24.—Jack Dempsey, the quietened Manassa Mauler, was waiting for his baby daughter to finish her nap today, so the Dempsey family could start on its first holiday since the old man nearly kicked off. So he had time to sit down in a deep chair, beneath the great photographic boxing murals that line his "study," and tell us just how he felt when he was slugging it out toe-to-toe with blood poisoning.

CONSIDINE

"I'll give you some idea about how much I know about medicine," he chuckled. "For two days before they dragged me away to the hospital I thought I had colic. Yeah, colic. And I guess I would've thought that right up until the time I kicked off if it hadn't been for Billy here." He indicated Billy Taub, with whom Jack is now also in the tailoring business.

"We were playing cards right here in this room and Billy noticed that I was beginning to turn green. He kept asking me if I was all right and I said yes, but as a matter of fact my stomach was getting so sore I couldn't touch it. Anyway, finally Billy didn't ask me anything else. He just got up and called the doctor, and I guess they got me down there just in time.

"The funny part of it was that for the first day or two—when they wouldn't let anybody in to see me and the telephone calls and telegrams started coming in—I thought it was just a gag. You know, a publicity gag. Something made up by Ned Brown.

One Horrible Night—Thought He Was Gone

"Then I began to get sleepy. This was after the operation. I'd get so sleepy I couldn't keep my eyes open and I couldn't think. I don't know how long that lasted. Maybe eight, ten days. But I do remembr this much:

"One night . . . I think it was night . . . I figured I was gone. I felt like I was standing on my head, and boy it was real-like. I was up on some kind of a table on my head. I couldn't get my feet down and though I tried to yell for somebody to come and get me, I couldn't make a sound. You know, how those dreams are. I felt myself getting weaker and weaker, standing on my head, but my legs just wouldn't come down. Yet as dumb as the whole idea is now, I knew I was just about to go."

Dempsey, 15 pounds lighter and still shaky on his pins, sighed with a tired happiness. "I guess the old number just wasn't up," he said. "Golly, I was lucky, though. You're a 10-to-1 shot if you get peritonitis."

Dempsey got a little under 20,000 letters, telegrams and packages containing good luck charms. It took four girls to handle the mail. When he gets a little more strength he hopes to go through the mail and send some kind of an answer to each one.

As soon as he gets his strength back, Jack wants to see Billy Conn.

Old Mauler Talks of Heavyweight Class

"They tell me Conn weighed 180 before he started training for Bettina," he said. "That's what I weighed against Willard. A heavyweight doesn't have to weigh more than that, if he can hit. Hell, a 130-pounder could win the heavyweight title if he had the punch. It's those quick hitters who hurt you, not the big lumbering guys with a long heavy punch.

"The hardest punch I ever took was from Carpentier, and what did he weigh? Something like 168, wasn't it? He hit awful quick, particularly if you moved into him and tried to bull him around. He hit me up here," Dempsey pointed to his cheekbone. "If he had hit me on the chin he'd a knocked me stiff."

Jack believes the Louis-Pastor fight will do well in Detroit and that Pastor might go the full 20 rounds. The quiet old mauler was just getting around to his favorite topic—Galento—when there was a crib-rattling sound from the bedroom. The baby was awake, and it was time for the domesticated old tiger man to go on his vacation. But he took one additional minute to do a very human thing. He showed us his scar, and from the length and breadth of it he could hold his own in a "speaking of operations" conversation with a Davies-treated eucalyptus.

Reds Cross Fingers, Hold Hopes for Flag

Nine Games in Front, Redlegs Return Home To Great Welcome

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, July 24.—Those rampaging Reds returned in triumph today from their most successful road trip of the season, but their fingers were crossed.

Like their front office, they preferred to leave "pennant enthusiasm" to the million-and-more fans who have seen them in action since April 17. It was "Ladies Day" at the Union Terminal when the team rolled in—wives, children and friends of the players making up a crowd of several hundred.

But more than one back-slapping well-wisher got only "we might have done better" by way of acknowledgement.

"It's better to be nine before than nine behind," grinned Gabe Paul, traveling secretary. "Our fingers are crossed."

Not even a reminder that any team playing as well could have copped 20 of the last 25 National League flags appeared to phase the boys. The Reds' percentage is .639, based on 53 wins and 30 defeats.

Since 1913, when the Giants won with .684, only five teams have annexed the pennant with better ball than the 1939 Rhinelanders:

Cubs of 1918, .651; Reds of 1919, .686; Cubs of 1929, .645; Cards of 1931, .656; Cubs of 1935, .649.

Whatever their outward refusal to count themselves in on the September jackpot, the Reds appeared to hold better than an even chance if only on the basis of their year's work to date.

With slightly better than three-fifths of all remaining games scheduled at home, the team so far has played .727 ball in its own back yard, against .587 on the road.

Senator's Secretary Shoots Hole in One

Special Dispatch to The Post

Luray, Va., July 24.—M. J. Menefee, secretary to Senator Harry Byrd, and a Luray resident, today claimed the honor of being the first person to make a hole in one on the new golf course at the new Jordon Hollow Country Club near Stanley. The feat was performed on hole No. 2, which requires a shot across a deep ravine on a green which cannot be seen from the tee.

Wise Barrister Wins Feature At Empire City

Yonkers' Cap Eligible Easy Winner Over Favored Bootless

By the Associated Press

Empire City, N. Y., July 24.—A lean six-day race card was offered under threatening skies here today as the final six days of the four-week meeting got under way. Four horses answered the call in the Pleasantville Purse, a mile-and-a-sixteenth event for 3-year-olds and upward. E. Boeing's Wise Barrister, the only member of the quartet eligible for next Saturday's $7,500 added Yonkers Handicap, at the same distance, proved an easy winner. The Wise Counsellor colt clicked by three lengths in 1:45 2-5.

E. R. Bradley's Bootless, a 7-to-10 shot and the second odds-on choice in four races to taste defeat, saved the place by a half length from Mrs. Clara Lyon's John's Heir. Cisneros was a dismal last.

Some backers of the favorite were disgruntled over Freddie Smith's handling of the Bradley 6-year-old. Smith got his mount away on top in a messy start but elected to take back until he was a half dozen lengths off the pace at the end of a quarter mile. John's Heir, although he stumbled leaving the gate, was rushed into a wide lead by Ronnie Nash. Bootless moved up to within a half length of the leader around the last bend. Wise Barrister, which had been closest in pursuit, ran into trouble on the rail at the home turn. He had to be taken to the outside.

Bootless put away John's Heir as he sailed into the stretch, but he could not get clear, for Wise Barrister was charging up on the outside. The latter, under Apprentice R. W. Smith—no relation to Freddie—urged the Boeing colt into a clear lead and sat still while pulling away with ease. Bootless tired and was in danger of losing the place in the final strides.

Revamped Bel Air Park Is Ready for Inaugural Tomorrow

200 Horses Are Expected At Meeting

Steeplechase Course Ready for Daily Races; New Clubhouse Awaits Turf Crowd

Special Dispatch to The Post

Bel Air, Md., July 24.—Maryland's newest racing track is teeming with activity these days as painters and carpenters and laborers of every description prepare for the opening of the ten-day meeting Wednesday.

More than 200 horses, including winners at Delaware Park and other mile tracks, are expected to be quartered here by next week and officials believe it will be a record-making event in every way.

Bel Air's steeplechase course, built by William du Pont, jr., is said to be the equal of any of its kind in America and is in condition to stand a jumping race daily.

The new grandstand, joined to the smaller one at the western end of the track, will seat 8,000 and thousands more can stand on the concrete runaways in front of the tiers of seats. A modern clubhouse adjoins the grandstand and is lined with more than 100 private boxes.

Pari-mutuel Manager McConnell has 36 sellers and 30 cashiers ready to handle Wednesday's attendance and wagering will be through the totalizator, marking the first time this system has been used on a State track of less than a mile. The electrical camera will judge every race from its position atop the grandstand.

Post time for the first race will be 2 p. m.

Kayak II Takes a Look at the Comic Strips

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Kayak II to Get Vacation After Gold Cup Victory

Inglewood, Calif., July 24 (AP).—Owner C. S. Howard and Trainer Tom Smith decided today to give Kayak II, winner Saturday of the $50,000 Gold Cup Handicap, a vacation until autumn.

Kayak II, also winner of the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap and not yet 4 years old, will be entered next in the Hawthorne Gold Cup at Chicago in September.

"We'll take him to Del Mar with Seabiscuit and the rest of the stable, and lay him up until time to go East for the late fall meetings," said Smith.

Dear Al:

When Bel Air opens tomorrow, turf fans hereabouts are going to get some small track racing deluxe. Ray Bryson and his associates, spurred on by the success of the track over Baltimore way, have made about every improvement possible in the plant. Most important from the standpoint of the customers, and they pay the bills, is the installation of a totalizator. This electric betting device is similar to that used for some years at Pimlico. Its chief advantage over other mutuel methods is that it assures accurate approximate odds. Each bet will register as the tickets are purchased and the odds as well as the amount of wagering will always be in front of John Fan.

Bel Air is the first of the smaller tracks to have a "tote." In addition, the size of the track has been increased to 6 furlongs with a width of 74 feature. The added distance has allowed for less sharp turns and should help the racing. Just to prove that it has been "trying," Bel Air has a new steeplechase course, designed by none other than William DuPont, jr., big chief of Delaware Park and the man responsible for the timber-topping layout at that track. Trainers who have schooled their horses over the new Bel Air course say that it is the real McCoy. The jumps are more than 5 feet and it will take good steeplechasers and hunters to get around. Speaking of steeplechases at Bel Air, some sort of a record was set there last year by Itsamaid, our old friend from Charles Town. Itsamaid was leading the pack by some 10 lengths with two fences to go when she fell and carried her jockey to the ground with her. A couple of horses passed the fallen pair, but Itsamaid's jockey got up, remounted and furthermore drove on to win the race. In answer to P. L. K.—The two horses who crashed head on at Hagerstown were Sweet Adeline and Glowing Coals. To G. H. McD.—From what I read, Jockey Eddie DeCamillis was not suspended for using a battery. He is alleged to have had a nail in his whip which he was using to urge the horse along. BILL.

First race—Miss Whim has the speed to be a dangerous factor if not the winner of this sprint. I'm going to string along with the fleet miss. Foggy Day won a race in the fog, if memory serves, and deserves some attention with this kind. Eye High for the minor award.

Second race—June Bee appears well placed in this maiden field of juveniles. Robart, performing at tops now, will have the mount. Golden Rapier has flashed speed and should be close. Ardour to take care of the others.

Third race—On The Dot shapes up as a keen contender in this sprint. Trials and races have been good and all we need is the right ride from Krovitz. Woodsie packs a punch on occasions and figures to be close. Highpool should take a position in the money circle.

Fourth race—Kens Revenge seems to favor the route here and may graduate from the maiden ranks. Probably will draw the bulk of the play and deserves the attention. Ellacaw had some help last out but is a fit horse. Selma Jack is not over his head in this company.

Fifth race—Peter Argo appears capable of handling the 115-pound assignment and he should lead the parade in this field. A good horse in good hands. Sirasia and Friendly Paul are fit and ready and will battle it out if the top one makes mistakes.

Sixth race—Kenyon C., with Adams to do the booting, may overcome topweight of 117 pounds and take down the main money in this group. The distance and the opposition appears to suit his purposes. Hilo Gaucho and Old Maid to fill out the money circle.

Seventh race

Loan Banks Report 7-Year Dividends

Payments Total $12,498,632 Since Founding in 1932

By Thomas M. Cahill.

With a half year's distribution of $919,904 June 30, the 12 Federal Home Loan banks have paid out a total of $12,498,632 in dividends on their capital stock in the last seven years, officials of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board report.

The semi-annual dividend for 1939 consisted of $687,378 to the Treasury of the United States, which has $124,741,000 invested in the capital stock of the banks, and $232,526 to savings, building and loan associations and other home-financing institutional members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, investments of which total $39,586,175. Total paid-in capital stock is $164,327,175. Semi-annual distribution figures do not include dividends by two of the banks located in Pittsburgh and Winston-Salem, as their dividends are paid on a calendar year basis.

Of the dividends from October 15, 1932, through June 30, 1939, the Treasury received $9,849,146 and the member institutions $2,649,486. Figures on assets of the banks depict the growth of the Home Loan Bank System since its establishment in 1932. Combined assets of the 12 banks at the end of the 1938-39 fiscal year totaled $296,629,853, an increase of $30,909,051 from assets of $265,770,802 on June 30, 1938, and a gain of $243,504,108 over the $53,125,745 at the end of June, 1933, the first date when figures were available.

On June 30, surplus, reserves and undivided profits of the banks amounted to $8,881,440, an increase of $2,332,315 over the $6,469,125 a year earlier. The Cincinnati district bank, which serves Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee, paid out the largest amount in dividends—$200,726—from January through June, 1939, followed by the Chicago bank serving Illinois and Wisconsin with $187,471. These banks also lead in cumulative dividends for the last seven years, Cincinnati with $2,243,383 and Chicago with $1,880,766.

Cumulative long and short term advances by the banks to member institutions totaled $523,023,390 on June 30. Repayments amounting to $354,061,827 left $168,961,563 as outstanding credits in use on June 30, a decline of $27,260,569 from the $196,222,132 figure a year earlier. Deposits of member associations with the banks reached $32,191,665 on June 30, a gain of $12,200,584 over the $19,991,081 on June 30, 1938. This drop in outstanding advances and increase in deposits, board officials said, reflect the growing volume of savings and investments from the public received in the last fiscal year by member institutions.

FDIC Annual Report

Branch banking in the United States is steadily increasing, according to the annual report of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, number of unit commercial banks declining by 194 during 1938, with number of banks operating branches increased by 15 and number of new branches by 55. The corporation admitted 48 banks during the year which had not been previously insured. Of these, 22 were new banks and 25 previously operating.

Security Dealers File

The National Association of Security Dealers, Inc., which has filed application with the Securities and Exchange Commission for registration, will be divided, for administrative purposes, into 14 districts, each of which will have a district committee. It is announced that Y. E. Booker, head of Y. E. Booker & Co., of Washington, will be chairman of District 11 which includes the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina. Mr. Booker has been actively interested in the preliminary work of organization of the association. B. Howell Griswold, jr., of Alexander Brown & Sons, Baltimore, is chairman of the association which has its headquarters at 1010 Vermont avenue northwest. Wallace H. Fulton, of this city, is a director, and David W. Evans, Washington, is comptroller.

Newspaper Advertising Gains

Newspapers and window display are increasing in popularity as promotion media for department and specialty stores, according to a survey completed by the sales promotion division of the National Retail Dry Goods Association. Out of every dollar spent for promotion by the average store, 64 cents went for newspaper lineage, the analysis for 1937-1938 indicated. This was on a par with 1936 expenditures but was two cents more than in 1936. The average store spent 13 cents on window display against 11 cents in 1935 and 1936 and 10 in 1934.

Federal Reserve Report

Debts to individual accounts in 24 Fifth Federal Reserve District cities, reflecting transactions passing through banks, rose 1 per cent in May over April of this year, and exceeded May, 1938, figures by 8 per cent. Fourteen of the 24 cities showed higher figures in May, 1939, than in April, 1939, and 21 revealed higher figures than in May, 1938. Columbia, S. C., reported the largest increase for both periods, May, 1939, figures being 26 per cent above those for May, 1938, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Va., reports.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, July 24—The stock market dropped back today after an early show of strength. British funds ended unchanged to a trifle lower. In the foreign group Japanese loans were marked up. Oils held on to part of morning gains and domestic rails were still on the plus side. Kaffirs and base metals were neglected. Industrials closed mostly on top, but well under the day's best marks. Transatlantics weathered profit taking to finish narrowly ahead.

Paris—Increased activity accompanied higher prices in the bourse today. Demand, largely in the form of short covering, appeared based on Anglo-Japanese developments and early rising tendencies in the London stock market. Rentes closed 10 to 25 centimes higher.

Liverpool—Cotton futures weakened today, reacting to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace's announcement of a 1⅛-cent subsidy on United States cotton exports. Liquidation was general and final prices were down 4 to 6 points for active deliveries. From a steady start, wheat futures declined sharply to close ⅝ to ¾d off. Trade interests and Argentine shippers' offers met only limited scale down demand.

Cotton Futures 30 to 50 Cents Higher Per Bale

New York, July 24 (AP).—Cotton futures moved briskly forward today in response to the week-end Government announcement of 1½ cents a bale subsidy on cotton for export. Active foreign buying and good demand by trade and spot interests carried prices to net gains of 6 to 10 points.

Although the amount of the subsidy had been largely discounted in trade circles, sharp declines in foreign markets brought an upward adjustment in domestic levels as world markets worked into balance for the 1½ cent subsidy. Foreign buying was broad, coming from Bombay, Liverpool, continental and Japanese interests.

Wheat, Corn Decline to Lows for 1939

Information Lacking as To Reasons for Falling Prices

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 24.—Grain prices plunged to new 1939 lows—in some cases six or seven year lows—in one of the worst market breaks in months today.

Wheat tumbled more than 3 cents a bushel, September contracts hitting 60⅜, lowest in ten months and only a cent above the bottom touched then, which broke all records since 1932.

Corn lost more than a cent, September touching 38⅜, lowest in six years. Oats and rye were at new seasonal lows, the latter at prices unequaled since 1933.

There was no fresh news on which the heavy selling in wheat could be blamed except a crop expert's report that Canada's harvest will be large, a forecast of scattered rains over the grain belt and a sharp increase in domestic visible supplies. The decline apparently was more the result of absence of buyers than anything else. Each dip in prices uncovered more resting orders to sell in order to check losses. The result was that the market closed virtually at its low point for the day.

Wheat finished 2¾-3⅛ lower than Saturday, September, 60⅜@60½; December, 62¼@62⅜. Corn, ⅞-1⅜ down; September, 38⅞@39; December, 40⅛@40¼. Oats, ¾-⅞ lower; rye, 1⅜-1¾ off, and lard, 3 to 8 lower.

Stocks Decline in Face of Expected Profit-Taking; Volume Exceeds Million Shares

New York, July 24.—A series of ups and downs in today's stock market left the list off 0.28 point on the average, an amount that was too small to hold any significance. Profit-taking after the good gains of last week was to be expected and there was nothing in the day's news to cause any change in sentiment. Brokers were cheered by a continuation of the improved activity, volume on the big board amounting to 1,069,210 shares.

The most potent factor on the bearish side was another sharp break in grain prices. Since the close of May pressure has been marked on all the cereals and including today's decline wheat futures have lost 20 cents a bushel and corn about 15 cents a bushel for this period. A large carryover of wheat and a domestic corn surplus of record breaking proportions have been chiefly responsible for the selling. The decline today was accelerated by an increase in the domestic visible supply, indications that Canada will have one of its biggest crops on record and a forecast of showers in the grain belt. Stop loss orders naturally were touched off on the decline.

September wheat at 60⅜ cents a bushel today was the lowest for any wheat contract since last September and only a cent above the low for seven years.

The wholesale commodity price index of the National Fertilizer Association dropped 0.4 point during the week ended July 22 and now is at the lowest since October, 1934.

Business News Bright

Offsetting the bearish influence of these developments in the field of commodities was a better tone in business news at the beginning of the week. Steel operations jumped to 60.6 per cent of capacity compared with 56.4 per cent the previous week.

Ignoring the week which contained the Independence Day holiday, there have been nine consecutive weekly advances in the steel rate and optimism is spreading in the industry.

Red Metal in Demand

In the metal market most of the producers have met the copper price advance announced Saturday and are quoting the refined metal at 10⅜ cents. Shipments of copper continue heavy and are expected to be up 40 per cent this month over a year ago. The trend of most of the indices of business is upward, but the disturbing influence at the moment appears to be the sharp decline in agricultural prices. As far as business is concerned, this factor is displacing the European turmoil in Wall Street's considerations.

Prevailing opinion in the financial district is more than ever to the effect that business would go ahead far better if governmental activities in business were curtailed. Consequently, the current discussion before Congress of the Administration's $2,490,000,000 lending bill is being followed closely.

Familiar arguments were trotted out again, including the claims that more lending by the Government will make more jobs and that such loans will not add to the national debt. Both have been tried and found wanting but they were put forward in Congress again today as if they were really valid.

Industrial Revival Needed

If it is true the lending of the above amount of money will create 500,000 new jobs, as the Administration forces asserted, why should we stop here? Let's lend 20 times as much and thus wipe out the army of the unemployed. The answer is that the unemployed problem can only be solved by a revival of private industry. This will come when the Government changes its attitude toward private enterprise; not while it is a competitor and an opponent. Already we have spent and lent billions and we are as far from the solution as ever.

More offensive is the repetition of the claim today that "it is entirely correct and by no means a misuse of words to say that this program involves no increase in the public debt." Proponents are proceeding on the theory that if they make such a statement a sufficient number of times, it will become true.

Full Return Doubtful

Actually the money to be lent is first to be borrowed by the RFC which will issue bonds that are guaranteed by the United States Government. The money will be lent to a long list of projects, notably for toll roads, railroad equipment purchases, projects of States and cities, rural electrification, and many others. Each is a gamble, as the loss record of the RFC already testifies, and the vast majority of such loans will be of the type which banks would not be inclined to make.

To class the entire expenditure of $2,490,000,000 as "self-liquidating" and to assume that all will be returned to the Government without involving any increase in the Federal debt is an insult to intelligence. An administration which has been so carefully coached in semantics should be more careful of its use of words.

Bond Trading Light

Listed bonds turned irregular today in quiet dealings, some of the changes being fairly sizable. United States Treasury issues were firm, but attention was centered on the new issue of $200,000,000 CCC notes, which were vastly oversubscribed. In the corporate section some of the borderline rails were weak, Pittsburgh and West Virginia bonds dropping sharply. Panama bonds remained active and firm in the foreign section. Turnover was only $4,880,000.

Small fractional advances were recorded in medium term United States Treasury issues, the shortest and longest maturities attracting no buying. Guaranteed bonds of the Farm and Home Corporations were steady, with formal turnover limited to eight bonds. Only small fractional variations in either direction were noted in highly rated utility, railroad and industrial obligations.

Rail Bonds Down

Medium priced carried bonds displayed a degree of uncertainty, but some gains were sprinkled among the recessions. Most borderline rails were lower, with Pittsburgh & West Virginia bonds especially weak. Default carrier issues did not vary much. Holding company issues and industrial convertibles dipped on the softness of equities. Local tractions were well maintained and communications issues improved.

Japanese Issues Advance

Stamped Panama 5s moved up more than 2 points, although some dealers are skeptical of the refinancing plan proposed for the eventuality of Senate approval of the new treaty. Other Latin-American default bonds were quiet and uneven. Polish bonds were dull and no interest was taken in Italian and German issues. The Japanese group was stimulated by the surface willingness of British officials to make concessions in the Far East. Best rated foreign bonds were quiet and irregular.

Trade Outlook Is Brighter, Survey Shows

Basic Conditions Advance for Third Consecutive Week

New York, July 24.—Basic conditions have shown a noticeable improvement since last week, making the third consecutive week of gain, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. The estimate of the annual normal demand for steel in 1939 has been increased from 36.4 per cent of capacity last week to 37.1 per cent this week. Actual output has rallied sharply, rising from 49.7 per cent of capacity last week to 56.4 per cent this week, a new high for 1939.

The present rate of output is excessive despite the improvement in the demand. However, the recent rally suggests that the corrective movement may be postponed until late in the year. This means that when the recession occurs, it will be exceptionally sharp.

The index of business income, for the week ended July 8, rose to 72.6 from 71.2 in the preceding week. On the other hand, the index of business expenses declined from 77.9 to 77.8, a new low for the recession. Consequently, expenses exceeded income by only 5.2 points as against an excess of 6.7 points in the preceding week, and an excess of 7.9 points in the middle of June, when business operations were at the most unprofitable level this year.

In the week ended July 8, the price index of farm products, which reflects the national income, extended its recovery from the recession's low for the third consecutive week. On the other hand, the index of manufactured goods prices declined to a new low for the recession. As a result, the purchasing power index advanced to 72.6 from 71.1 in the preceding week and from the 1939 low of 70.0 in the middle of June.

Steel Operations to Advance to 60.6%

New York, July 24 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week will advance 4.2 points to 60.6 per cent of capacity, again the highest for the year, compared with 56.4 per cent last week, the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today. A month ago operations were at the rate of 54.3 per cent of capacity. The newest operating schedule will place output at the fastest pace since the last week of November, 1938, when the rate was 60.7 per cent of capacity.

Farm Income For June Placed At $508,000,000

By the Associated Press.

The Agriculture Department estimated yesterday that farmers' cash income from marketings totaled $501,000,000 in June, about 1 per cent less than the estimate of $508,000,000 in May. Usually, the department said, the reverse is true with incomes increasing slightly from May to June. Income this June was 3 per cent smaller than the $514,000,000 reported for June, 1938.

Government payments to farmers amounted to $51,000,000 in June, about $30,000,000 less than in May. Including Government payments, the farmers' June income totaled $552,000,000, compared with $589,000,000 in May and $559,000,000 in June, 1938.

The June estimates brought income from marketings to $2,967,000,000 for the first half of 1939, about 4 per cent less than the estimate of $3,084,000,000 from January through June a year ago.

Flaxseed Production

The Census Bureau reports flaxseed crushed in the quarter ended June 30 totaled 173,800 tons, producing 124,822,694 pounds of linseed oil, compared with 111,681 tons of seed and 77,513,277 pounds of oil in the corresponding period a year ago.

Commercial Bank Loans Continue Rise

By the Associated Press

Commercial, industrial and agricultural loans gained for the fourth straight week in the seven days ended July 19. Bankc in 101 leading cities reported to the Federal Reserve Board that their business loans, totaling $3,893,000,000 on July 19, were $6,000,000 higher than a week ago.

The advance was led by increases of $4,000,000 each in the Cleveland district and in New York City, offset slightly by small decreases in some other areas. For the 101 cities, business loans now are $15,000,000 larger than a year ago.

New Fish Body In Md. Facing Legal Tangle

Proposed State Commission Meets With Stiff Opposition

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, July 24.—Legal efforts to forestall a referendum on the act creating a new State marine fisheries commission were heard today by Circuit Judge Ridgely P. Melvin.

Judge Melvin took the petition of State Senator Philip Dorsey, jr., Albert W. Woodfield, delegate, and J. Wesley Kelley, secretary of the Maryland Outdoor Life Federation, under advisement.

They sought a writing of mandamus to prevent the referendum in 1940 to make the new commission act effective at once.

The "split conservation commission" laws, creating separating administrative divisions to oversee upland game and marine fisheries conservation, were passed by the administration steamroller in the 1939 Legislature.

Opponents of the measure obtained the requisite 10,000 names to hold the law in abeyance until after the 1940 referendum. Attorney General William C Walsh ruled the petition in proper form, and that the referendum should go on the ballot.

Attorneys for the petitioners today argued the new law was nonreferable, as the act included appropriations necessary for the maintenance of State government, which may be challenged by referendum action.

The petitioners held that the law and the budget were interlocking legislation, as a budget footnote provided that the funds appropriated for the old commission go to the new commission in the event of its creation.

Walsh and William L. Henderson, assistant attorney general, opposed the petition, holding the act was constitutional and clearly referable under the referendum laws. Walsh pointed out the revenues of the State would be unaffected whatever the vote on the referendum.

Dr. Ellison Dies on Auto Trip in Mexico

Widely-Known D. C. Specialist Was Taking Vacation

Dr. Everett Monroe Ellison, widely known Washington specialist in tuberculosis and children's diseases and a leader in religious and social activities, died of a heart attack early yesterday in Mexico, while en route here from Mexico City, where he had been on vacation.

DR. ELLISON

The physician had been in Texas attending an international convention of Loyal Knights of the Round Table, and from there went to Mexico City in company with his wife, Mrs. Fannie May Huff Ellison. He died while motoring through Valles, San Luig Potosi State.

Widely Connected Here

Dr. Ellison became widely connected here, after making Washington his residence in 1907. He was president of the Citizens' Service Association for Law and Order, memeber of the board of managers of the Y. M. C. A., on the official board of Foundry Methodist Church, president of the United Dry Forces for the District of Columbia, member of medical department of the District National Guard, trustee of Southeastern University, president of the Gospel Mission, member of the American Medical Association, the D. C. Medical Society and the George Washington Medical Society.

He was born in Parrottsville, Tenn., on March 2, 1879. He received his A. B. degree from U. S. Grant University in 1901, and his A. M. in 1903. His M. D. degree was obtained from George Washington University in 1912 and his Ph. D. in 1925. He had taught in the Philippine Islands from 1904 to 1907.

Since coming here he had been a member of the visiting staffs of Gallinger and George Washington University hospitals and other local medical institutions.

Three Children Survive

He was married to Miss Alberta Bayne Huntt, of Washington, on December 20, 1916. From this marriage there were three children, Alice Elizabeth, Margaret Isabel and Nancy Doris Ellison. His second marriage was in 1930. Three brothers suprvive, Newell W. Ellison, of Washington; Thaddeus S. Ellison, of Parrottsville, Tenn., and William B. Ellison, of Lenoir City, Tenn., and two sisters, Mrs. Frank LaRue, of Parrottsville, and Mrs. E. E. Jones, of Harriman, Tenn.

The funeral arrangements had not been complete yesterday, but it was said the body would be taken to Parrrottsville, Tenn., for burial.

Wife of Coolidge Aid Give Ancient Altar To 'Church of the Good Thief' at N. Y. Prison

The 18,000-pound carved wood altar (left) originally from a late sixteenth century church at Cebu, in the Philippine Islands, has been given to inmates of the Clinton Prison at Dannemore, N. Y. Mrs. Maria L. Latrobe (right), the wife of President Coolidge's military aide, of Chevy Chase, Md., is the donor. Dedicated to the "Good Thief, St. Dismas," who died with Christ on Calvary, the altar is to be placed in a church being built near the prison's entrance

Inmates of New York State's "Siberia," Clinton Prison at Dannemora, are building a "Church of the Good Thief" in the shadow of the prison walls, where they will worship at a 300-year-old altar donated by the wife of President Coolidge's military aide.

Mrs. Maria L. Latrobe, the wife of United States Army Col. Osmun Latrobe, contributed the 18,000-pound carved wooden altar to the prison church because she heard "that 3,000 convicts were in need of a place of worship."

The altar came originally from a late sixteenth century church at Cebu in the Philippines. The church was constructed to house an image of the Holy Child that was carried to the Philippines by Magellan, sixteenth century explorer who was the first man to sail around the earth.

Mrs. Latrobe, who lives at 6308 Connecticut avenue, Chevy Chase, Md., said that the altar was probably carved by Spaniards utilizing field knives. The wood is the hardest in the Philippines and resembles ebony.

The altar consists of eight 5-foot wooden columns and two 6-foot carved panels.

Mrs. Latrobe, who was born in Puerto Rico, the daughter of a Spanish naval officer, believes the altar came into her family many years ago as a gift. She hoped to build a home with a chapel to house the altar, she said, but was glad of the opportunity to donate it to a church, "where it really belongs."

The church, dedicated to the "Good Thief," St. Dismas, who died with Christ on Calvary, is being built near the Clinton Prison entrance. Its cornerstone was laid Sunday, with the Most Rev. Francis J. Monaghan, Roman Catholic Bishop of Ogdensburg, officiating.

Cardinal Hayes, of New York, was one of the sponsors of the church, Mrs. Latrobe said. He contributed $10,000 to its construction.

Hubbell, Schumacher Troubles Tell Story of Giants' Failure

By the Associated Press

New York, July 24.—Injuries and other misfortunes have bobbed up like ginger ale bubbles in the National League this season, but they seem to be getting more than their share of the blame for evil days which might befall a team.

Much has been written about the luck of the Giants, all bad. Bill Terry's team has lost nine straight, which is subpar even on the Phillie course. It lost two shortstops, had an outfielder playing third, and a first baseman pitching, among other things.

All of which undoubtedly made Terry's job one large headache. But it also took the spotlight away from what is the major cause of the Giant disaster.

That cause could have been discerned by watching the bullpen in deep right center the other day. It was the picture of Carl Hubbell and Hal Schumacher warming up for relief duty.

Tells Complete Story

The Giants' pennant chances hinged on the ability of Hubbell and Schumacher to show their old-time form after winter arm operations. The fact that they are being used in relief roles, although also starting, tells its own story.

It often has been demonstrated that a club could have its infield crippled up with rheumatiz, its outfield groaning with ptomaine and its catching staff stove up with shin splints and still be a pretty dangerous outfit it if had one thing—able pitching.

That is what the Giants' haven't had, although it is admitted that air-tight support can make an ordinary pitcher look pretty good, and that a good pitcher might look pretty bad with nothing behind him but his shadow. A shortstop making four errors, as Scalzi did in one game, could lose a no-hit game.

At present the Giant pitching staff stacks up as the weakest in the league. Terry hasn't a man he can start with any confidence he will be closer than the clubhouse when the last out is made.

All the other clubs have chuckers who really are chucking this year. The Reds and Bees are knee deep in good moundsmen, with such men as Paul Derringer, Bucky Walters, Junior Thomson, Lou Fette, Jim Turner and Danny Macfayden itching to work.

The surprising Cardinals have Curt Davis, Bob Weiland, Lon Warneke and Mort Cooper ready to go all the way. Brooklyn has Luke Hamlin, Hugh Casey, and until recently, had Whit Wyatt. The Pirates have Truett Sewell, Bob Klinger and Joe Bowman, despite the inactivity of Russ Bauers and Cy Blanton. Even the lowly Phils have fair country chuckers in Hugh Mulcahy, Walter Higbe and the ancient Syl Johnson. Old Charley Root is doing right well for the Cubs, and Bill Lee, although not as effective as last year, still is a horse for work.

The Giants were relying primarily on Schumacher and Hubbell. They aren't the peerless duo of other years, and Terry has been forced to rely on the unpredictable performances of Clift Melton, Bill Lohrman, Harry Gumbert and Manuel Salvo.

Clerk Sues Hospital For $30,000, Says Leg Was Scalded

Herman M. Zabrek, 22, grocery clerk, of 1331 Trinidad avenue northeast, yesterday sued Garfield Hospital for $30,000 for burns he claimed he suffered when a hot-water bottle leaked and scalded his left leg.

Attorney Harold P. Ganss filed Zabrek's complaint, which asked $10,000 each for breach of warranty, breach of contract and for negligence.

Zabrek said the hot-water bottle was placed on his leg while he was receiving a blood transfusion after a serious operation, and that he could not leave the hospital for two months.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

East's temper was tested on today's hand when his partner made a discard that gave away the location of the spade honors. West, as defenders frequently do, in discarding a worthless card, revealed his partner's hand and certified declarer's plans for winning the contract.

Declarer might have made his three no trump bid in any case, but West's play cinched it. East was unusually gracious about his partner's error, however, and the unfavorable result was forgotten in the next shuffle. The hand and the biddings are shown in today's box.

The bidding:

The description by H. A., the contributor, follows:

"I ducked the first diamond lead, but the second diamond lead I won per force. I could count eight tricks. I pinned my hopes on the ten of spades for the ninth trick. Before trying the spade finesse, I wanted some encouragement from my fair opponents.

"I played four rounds of clubs. On the last club East discarded a heart, I let go a diamond, and West, full of joy, discarded the nine of spades, as if it were the black sheep of the family. The rest is self-evident."

Declarer finessed the spades and picked up the trick for his contract.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

According to Representative Izac, of California, the bills fathered by him and Representative Voorhis, also of California, to provide an additional $15,000,000 for the expenses of the administrative staff of the WPA stand little chance of getting very far this session if Congress really does adjourn on August 5. In case that $15,000,000 ever does go through there is a good opportunity for administrative workers who are being dismissed all over the country to come back to their jobs, Izac believes.

What about this, Dr. Dafoe? Only two years ago ranger-naturalists at Yellowstone were saying that only once in a lifetime did a mother grizzly come padding out of the woods with four cubs. Imagine their surprise—not so mild—when Mrs. Bruin did just that the other day. Her four young toddlers are one more than the average number for a bear family. And is her muzzle stuck in the air!

Of course everybody knows about the nice, friendly bear that sidled up to the visiting tourist's car at Yellowstone and lapped a sandwich out of his hand. That's a story that's always displayed along with the picture postcards.

But what you ought to be told—it belongs to the school of realism—is the fact that so far this season some bears, not so gentle or genteel, have taken various-sized mouthfuls out of the hands that held the sandwiches. The total of "reputable bites" for 1939 thus far is 23. However, that is doing better than 1938, when no less than 34 tourists had something to yell about before their summer vacation was over.

Speaking of the great outdoors, there's the junior nature walk this morning under the sponsorship of National Capital Parks. It's through upper Fort Dupont Park from 9:30 to 11.

Tomorrow morning and Saturday afternoon Ranger-Naturalist Lewis W. Kehr will be blazing a trail through Piney Branch parkway to the Indian Quarry, where redskins once carried on a rearmament program by manufacturing arrowheads. Tomorrow's hours are from 9:30 a. m. to 11 a. m. On Saturday they're from 2:30 to 4:30. Everyone coming along should gather at the northeast corner of Sixteenth street and Arkansas avenue.

Then on Thursday evening at Fort Bunker Hill Park Amphitheater the Government will put on a couple of its movie thrillers. At 8 p. m. the all-star cast will feature a couple of smoky volcanoes, crunching glaciers and rock-dissolving underground rivers.

The fact that Clark Gable and Carole Lombard have spoken for the farmer's life may be just a publicity stunt for the Government's latest celluloid entitled "Pou[illegible] a Billion-Dollar Industry." Ou[illegible]ing is certain, if the Governmen[illegible] were really working for Hollywood, that title would be "Billion Dollar Biddie" before it got to the lights in the marquee.

Our suspicion is, however, that in spite of its long name, the Federal film is good enough to stand on its own celluloid without any help from klieg-lit California.

To be reeled off at the seventh World's Poultry Congress in Cleveland, July 28, to August 7, it's going to include shots of "skyscraper" poultry houses, machines that separate eggs into different grades by weight and a broiler plant with more than 18,000 broilers.

And one of the sequences will concern itself with an egg-breaking plant where each day more than 100 girls break about 3,000 cases of eggs out of their shells for freezing and drying.

The National Federation of Federal Employes Playhouse is getting to be such a boom that by the time it's ready to up its curtains in the fall, it will need a new assistant director. Lee Shugar is sending out "help" calls right now. Not only an assistant director, but persons interested in make-up, scene painting, etc., are on the situations open list.

And, says Shugar, the Playhouse can do with a couple of talented titians who can flick off a musical play or two.

The quiz program, by the way, was such big-doings that it's going to be repeated as soon as more teams can be organized and more questions thought up. The quota for each one of these groups is four, but the groups themselves are unlimited.

Who wants the old Philadelphia Custom House? Secretary of the Interior Ickes, who recently designated it as a national historic site, is ready any day to put his pen on the dotted line in a co-operative agreement with "a reputable organization of sound financial standing, interested in using the Custom House and capable of presenting and interpreting it to the public as an historic site of prime national significance."

The interested party will have to assist in building repairs to the extent of $12,500, and his annual maintenance and operating costs will run from $10,000 to $15,000.

The Custom House practically rubs elbows with most of Philadelphia's other historical buildings, including Independence Hall, Carpenter's Hall, the Betsy Ross House and the Robert Morris House.

From 1824 to 1836 it housed the Second Bank of the United States. Designed by Benjamin H. Latrobe, top American architect of the nineteenth century, it was supposed to be a free copy of the Parthenon at Athens.

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL.

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

Chapter XLIX

BUCK took the Baxters' list.

He said, "This look like a heap o' things wrote out here. If we don't git a good price and the money don't hold out, what must I skip?"

"The gingham and the domestick," Ma Baxter said.

Penny said, "No, Buck, you git Ma's gingham, whatever come. Git the gingham and the ax head and the shell cases and lead. And the hickory shirtin', that's Jody's portion."

"Blue and white," Jody called. "All mingledy, Buck, like a joint snake."

He slapped the reins over the backs of the horses.

Ma Baxter shrilled after him, "The wool cloth's the worst needed."

Lem said, "Stop this wagon. You see what I see?"

He jerked his thumb at the deer-hide stretched on the smoke-house wall. He jumped down from the wagon-seat and opened the gate and walked with long rangy strides to the smoke-house. He turned aside, searching. He discovered the antlers, drying on a nail. He walked deliberately to Penny and knocked him against the smoke-house wall. Penny went white. Buck and Mill-wheel came hurrying. Ma Baxter turned and ran into the house for Penny's gun.

Lem said, "That'll learn you to lie to me and slip off that-a-way. Wasn't goin' after the buck, eh?"

Penny said, "I'd ought to kill you for that, Lem, but you're too sorry to kill. Gittin' that buck was pure happen-so."

"You're lyin'."

Penny turned to Buck, ignoring Lem.

He said, "Buck, no man's never knowed me to lie. If you-all had remembered that, you'd not of got beat in the dog-trade."

Buck said, "That's right. Don't pay him no mind, Penny."

Lem turned and stalked back to the wagon and climbed into the seat.

Buck said in a low voice, "I'm powerful sorry, Penny. He's mean, at best. He's been this-a-way ever since Oliver takened his gal away from him. He's got ugly as a buck-deer that cain't find his doe."

Penny said, "I was aimin' to give you-all a quarter o' the venison on your way back. I'll swear, Buck, this be hard to forgive."

"I'd not blame you. Well, don't fret about your share in the cubs, or the tradin'. Me and Mill-wheel kin tie Lem in knots any time he need it."

THEY RETURNED TO the wagon. Buck lifted the reins and turned the horses around. He would pick up the north road past the sink-hole. It would take them through Hopkins Prairie, past Salt Springs, and so north to Palatka, where they would cross the river and perhaps spend the night before proceeding. Jody and Penny watched after the wagon and Ma Baxter, peering from the door, set down the gun. Penny went into the house and sat down.

Ma Baxter said, "Why'd you take it from him?"

"When one man's on-reasonable, t'other has got to keep his head. I ain't big enough to fight him jest so. All I could of done wa to of takened the gun and shot him. When I kill a man, hit'll be for somethin' more serious than a ignorant man's meanness."

He was plainly unhappy.

"Now I would love to live peace-able," he said.

To Jody's surprise, his mother said, "I reckon you done the right thing. Don't set studyin' about it no more."

He could not quite understand either of them. He was filled with resentment at Lem, and with disappointment that his father had let him go unpunished. He was confused by his own feelings. Just as he had changed his allegiance from Oliver to the Forresters, Lem betrayed his father. He finally solved it in his mind by deciding to hate Lem, but to continue to like the others, especially Buck. The hate and the friendliness were of equal satisfaction.

There was nothing in particular to be done in the way of work, and he spent the morning helping his mother peel pomegranates and string the peelings to dry. They were the best remedy, she said, for dysentery. He ate so many pomegranates that she was afraid he would need the remedy before it was ready. He liked to bite the transparent crispness from around the seeds.

November slid into December with no more sign than the high, sad cry of the wood ducks flying. They left their hammock nests and moved from lake to pond and back again. Jody wondered why some birds cried in flight while others were silent. The whooping cranes gave their rusty call only in motion. Hawks screamed from the air but sat still and frozen in the tree. Sapsuckers were noisy on the wing but gave themselves to the bark of trees with no further sound than the tat-tat of their pecking. Quail spoke only from the ground and soldier blackbirds shrilled from the rushes. Mocking birds sang and chattered day or night, on the wing, or perched along the fences or in the poke-berry bushes.

The curlews were coming south. They came every winter from Georgia. The old ones were white with long curved bills.

The young ones, from the spring hatching, were gray-brown in color. The young curlews made fine eating. When fresh meat was scarce, dr the Baxters were tired of squirrel, Penny and Jody rode old Caesar to Mullet Prairie and shot half a dozen. Ma Baxter roasted them like turkey and Penny swore the flavor was even sweeter.

BUCK FORRESTER had traded the bear cubs in Jacksonville for a good price. He had brought the Baxters all the articles on Ma's list and a small sack of silver and copper in change, to boot. Relations between the Forresters and the Baxters were strained since Lem's attack on Penny and after the settlement the big dark men rode by without stopping.

Penny said, "Likely Lem persuaded the rest I raly meant to cheat about the deer. We'll git it all straight one day."

Ma Baxter said, "Hit suits me jest as good to have nothin' to do with 'em."

"Now Ma, don't fergit how Buck lit in when I was snakebit."

"I ain't fergot. But that Lem's like a snake hisself. Turn and strike at you jest 'cause he hears the leaves rustle."

Buck stopped one day, however, to announce that he believed they had accounted for all the wolves. They had shot one at the corral, had trapped three more and had seen no sign of one since. The bears were giving them constant trouble. The most troublesome was old Slewfoot, whose maraudings were taking him. Buck said, from the river on the east to Lake Jumper on the west. His favorite stopping place was the Forrester corral. He watched the wind and eluded both dogs and traps, slipped into the corral and made off with a calf whenever it pleased him to do so. The nights the Forresters sat up and waited for him, he did not appear.

Buck said, "Hit'll not do you much good to look out for him, but I thought I'd pass the word."

Penny said, "My lot lays so clost to the house, mebbe I kin ketch him at his tricks. I thank you, Buck. I been wantin' to say somethin', I hope you ain't mixed up in your mind about that buck Lem got so ornery about."

Buck said evasively, "That's all right. What's one deer? Well, so long."

Penny shook his head and went back to his work. It disturbed him not to be on friendly terms with his only neighbors in his small scrub-world.

Work was light and Jody spent long hours with Flag. The fawn was growing fast. His legs were long and spindling. Jody discovered one day that his light spots, the emblem of deer infancy, had disappeared. He examined the smooth hard head at once for signs of horns. Penny saw him at it and was obliged to laugh at him.

"You shore expect wonders, boy. He'll be butt-headed 'till summer. He'll not have no horns 'til he's a yearlin'. Then they'll be leetle ol' spiky ones.'

Jody knew a content that filled him with a warm and lazy wonder. Even Oliver Hutto's desertion and the Forresters' withdrawal were distant ills that scarcely concerned him. Almost every day he took his gun and shot-bag and went to the woods with Flag. The black-jack oaks were no longer red but a rich brown. There was frost every morning. It made the scrub glitter like a forest full of Christmas trees. It reminded him that Christmas was not far away.

Penny said, "We'll flunk around 'til Christmas, and we'll go to the Christmas doin's at Volusia. Then after that we'll git down to work agin."

Jody found a patch of Cherokee beans in the pine woods beyond the sink-hole. He gathered his pockets full of the bright red seeds. They were as hard as flint. He stole a large needle and a length of stout cotton thread from his mother's sewing basket and took them with him when he went prowling. He sat down in the warmth of the sun with his back against a tree and strung them laboriously, a few each day, to make a necklace for his mother. The seeds were strung unevenly but the effect pleased him.

Baptists Hear Call for Action On Persecution

Soviet and Rumanian Issues Cited in Report To Alliance Congress

Michael Mahoney, of Ottawa, Canada, among the first men in the Klondike gold rush of 1898, will tell the Capitol Lions Club about the shooting of Dan McGrew, which he witnessed, at a luncheon tomorrow at the Mayflower Hotel.

The story of McGrew's death was made famous in a poem by Robert N. Service.

The luncheon will be attended by 50 Lions from Illinois, who will stop in Washington en route to Chicago from the international convention at Pittsburgh.

Members of 14 Lions Clubs have been invited to the luncheon, according to E. G Purvis, the Capitol Club's reporter.

These clubs are at Alexandria, Va.; Anacostia, Arlington, Va.; Bethesda-Chevy Chase, East Gate, Georgetown, Hyattsville, Md.; Laurel, Md.; North Washington, Seat Pleasant, Md.; Silver Spring, Md.; Tacoma Park, Md.; Upper Marlboro, Md., and Upper Montgomery, Md.

Atlanta, Ga., July 24.—Dr. James Henry Rushbrooke, of London, told the Baptist World Alliance today that democracy is doomed to failure unless two conditions—high standards of character and knowledge—are satisfied.

Addressing 6,000 messengers representing 60 nations, Dr. Rushbrooke accented a plea for religious freedom with a call for action on foreign "persecution" in his five-year report as general secretary.

In a half-dozen European lands dictatorship had triumphed, he said, because of the strength of group interests and corruption—"in other words, lack of character."

Dictatorships Must Be Isolated

"The other main factor favoring dictatorship," he said, "is lack of knowledge; democracy fails through want of distortion of information. That is why a controlled and muzzled press is a universal feature of totalitarian and would-be totalitarian systems.

"Above all, dictatorships in the political sphere depends on isolation; the country must be a separated unit, its citizens preserved from contact with the ideas of others. Not human, but national or racial ends, are to be served.

Dr. Rushbrooke asserted the most menacing of "evil omens" in the last five years was the activity of secular and ecclesiastical powers in "narrowing the bounds of liberty," adding that in less than half of the European continent did religious toleration exist.

Hopes for Action

The secretary said he hoped the sixth annual congress, now in its third day here, would take definite action on the issues of religious tolerance such as prevail in Rumania and Russia. He said he felt "certain pledges" of liberty in Spain would be met by Gen. Franco.

A departure from the program occurred soon after the start of today's morning session when Dr. Rushbrooke announced signs indicating seating sections for various conventions would be removed, explaining "it had been suggested that they had some bearing on racialism."

This action won immediate praise from colored leaders, some of whom had protested against the signs.

Nazi Flag Disappears

Atlanta, Ga., July 24 (INS).—The flags of all but one nation fluttered today over Peachtree street in honor of the World Baptist Alliance meeting here.

The missing emblem was that of Nazi Germany. It was with the others Saturday and Sunday but was mysteriously gone this morning.

It will not be replaced. There is no other Nazi flag in town.

Rev. Mr. Jarnigan Speaks

A world crusade for the enlistment of youth was described by the Rev. W. H. Jarnigan, of Washington, as the "next number" on the program of the Christian church.

Asserting that "into that titanic service we should call preachers, teachers, Christian schools and all local churches," Jarnigan added:

"The religion of Jesus Christ is the only power that will keep the youth of the world from hate, from doubt, from standing still, or from turning back."

Wallace. The award, given under the auspices of the American Genetic Association, was made at ceremonies at the Maryland Plant Introduction Station at Glenn Dale, Md.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills. Adv.

Magazine 'Senator' Fights Landlord For Typewriters

The magazine Senator, which last week told the courts it was $84,000 "in the red" after seven months of publication, yesterday asked District Court to make the landlord give back its typewriters and unlock its offices at 1627 K street northwest.

The Senator, published by Toga Press, Inc., was allowed to retain its property pending action by a receiver in bankruptcy. The order was signed last Thursday.

Despite the order, the magazine told the court yesterday, Friday night the Normandy Corporation moved every stick of the Senator's property out of its suite of six offices.

Scotch Must Come From Scotland, Says U.S.

The Federal Alcohol Administration refused yesterday to permit non-Scottish liquor to be designated as Scotch.

Some dealers had proposed that use of the names Scottish or Irish be permitted if the whisky resembled the products of those countries, and if the name of the country of origin appeared on the label.

Louisiana Conservation Chief Resigns

Says Long Asked Him To; Arraignment of Smith, Weiss Put Off

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, July 24.—Resignation of William G. Rankin as head of the State Conservation Department, which regulates the State's $100,000,000 oil industry, was announced today by Gov. Long.

Rankin's letter stated Long had requested that he quit, "giving as your reason that you had just become Governor and should be given the right to appoint heads of all executive departments."

Arraignment Postponed

Two additional Federal oil investigators arrived today to join the "hot oil" probe ordered last week by Secretary of Interior Ickes, who already had ordered two other investigators here to co-operate with a Federal grand jury.

Meanwhile, arraignment in Federal court of Seymour Weiss, State political leader, Dr. James Monroe Smith, former president of the university, and three others on charges of mail fraud was postponed until August 4 to give attorneys time to prepare their pleadings.

Walter Hamlin, attorney for Smith, threatened to name the person Smith says advised him to flee the State a month ago, if the State should attempt to make capital of the flight in forthcoming trials.

Investigator Asks Three Aides

O. John Rogge, Assistant Attorney General, said in Washington he would ask Attorney General Murphy to give him at least three assistants to help in special investigations and mail fraud prosecutions.

Farm Blocs Force Revision Of Rail Bill

Write in 2 Amendments To Equalize Industrial And Agricultural Rates

By the Associated Press.

Farm blocs, in at least temporary control of the House, wrote into pending transportation legislation yesterday two amendments intended to equalize freight rates on agricultural and industrial products.

Over strenuous opposition of House interstate commerce committeemen, the members tentatively approved a declaration that rate reductions allowed on manufactured products for export be applied also to exportable supplies from the farm.

Then, they rewrote the authorization for the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate freight rate differentials between sections of the country so as to include farm products in the study, as well as manufactured commodities.

Waterwork Bloc Wins Skirmish

Chairman Jones (Democrat), Texas, of the House Agricultural Committee, sponsored the first revision and the House accepted it on a 72-to-32 standing vote. Chairman Whittington (Democrat), Mississippi, of the House Flood Control Committee, offered the second, which went in by a voice vote.

Earlier, the bipartisan bloc which has pledged itself to eliminate provisions for I. C. C. control of waterways won a preliminary skirmish, although it was not related directly to the waterway sections.

It succeeded in putting into the bill instructions that the I. C. C. administer the act so as to "maintain their inherent rights of rail, water and truck carriers."

Waterways Vote Today

Representative Rayburn, of Texas, House majority leader, and others contended that the language was useless and unnecessary, that it was in the general declaration of policy.

The legislation, already approved by the Senate in an entirely different form, would, in addition to the waterway sections and the freight rate differential inquiry, authorize new Federal loans to railroads, repeal the land-grant statutes and permit railroads, rather than the I. C. C., to initiate consolidation and coordination moves.

A vote is expected today on the question of eliminating the section which would place waterways under I. C. C. control.

C. E. Garvey Rites To Be Tomorrow; Indian Campaigner

Services for Charles E. Garvey, 78, veteran of two Indian campaigns and a former District policeman, will be at 10 a. m. today in the Church of the Nativity followed by interment in Mount Olivet Cemetery. He died Saturday in Soldiers' Home Hospital after a brief illness.

A cowpuncher in his youth in California where he had migrated with his family from Boston, Mr. Garvey joined the United States Cavalry in 1878 and served in two campaigns. He had his horse shot from under him in the White Bird Canyon in Idaho. He rode the mail for 50 cents a day for a short time after his discharge from the Army in 1883.

In 1889 Mr. Garvey came to Washington and was named a member of the District police force where he remained until 1921. A guard in the Department of Internal Revenue was his last job. He retired to live with his stepdaughter, Miss Ellen T. Burke, 617 Jefferson street northwest, in 1931. He was active in the Association of Retired Policemen.

Surviving him, besides his stepdaughter, is a daughter, Mrs. Agnes E. Heide, and a brother, Daniel J. Garvey, both of Washington.

General Motors Strike Spreads

Detroit, July 24 (AP).—The strike of skilled workers spread to a twelfth General Motors division today as representatives of the corporation and the C. I. O. United Automobile Workers failed to make progress in their negotiations.

General Motors rejected the proposal of James F. Dewey, Federal labor conciliator, that the issue of wage rates, one of the biggest impediments to a settlement, be placed in the hands of an arbitrator. The union said it found the plan acceptable.

Philadelphia Murder Ring Trials Delayed

Philadelphia, July 24 (AP).—Trial of Mrs. Providenza Miccichi, charged with a part in Philadelphia's murder-for-insurance ring, was postponed today indefinitely.

GHA to Join Federation of Health Groups

Tentative Report On Organization to Be Ready Nov. 1

Establishment of a permanent organization to co-ordinate several group health plans offering medical service on pre-payment basis will be participated in by the Group Health Association here. A tentative report probably will be ready by November 1, it was said yesterday by C. G. Garman, GHA president.

The GHA, composed of Federal workers in Washington, was named on an organizing committee which will make plans for the permanent "federation" of prepaid medical clinics. The committee was named at the recent convention in New York of mutual health organizations.

The organization will serve as a clearing house of ideas for improving the operation of group medical plans, Garman said.

The GHA had a leading part in the first annual convention of the group health organizations in New York. "Several groups represented at the convention, including our association here, are placing increased emphasis on preventive medicine. The membership of these associations is beginning to realize that they are paying groups of doctors, specialists and general practitioners associated together in well-equipped clinics, to keep them well—not just to care for them when they are sick," Garman said.

The committee to plan for the new national "federation" includes, besides the GHA, representatives from the following groups: Ross-Loos, of Los Angeles; Trinity Hospital, Little Rock, Ark., and Group Health Association, of New York City.

The GHA here was represented at the New York convention by Dr. Mario Scandiffio, medical director; Perry Taylor, administrator, and Garman. Greenbelt Health Association was represented by Dr. S. Berenberg, Dr. J. Still, Ted Holmes, business manager, and Mrs. M. Malkin.
